CLOBBER'S BALLET ACHE. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Terrytoons. 6m. This time apartment house superintendent Clobber is bothered by a ballet dancer tenant. He tries to give the dancer's room to a championship fighter. However, the dancer has other ideas and bests the champ in a fight. Clobber, disgusted, tells the champ who is flat on his face that he is going to teach him some footwork. FAIR. (5901).

SIDNEY'S FAMILY TREE. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Terrytoons. 6m. Sidney, orphan elephant, is adopted by a mother chimp even though her husband is skeptical about two tons of baby. He is happy with his new parents; but the feeling is not entirely reciprocated. Father chimp takes him out for a jungle walk with the idea of losing him; but Sidney thinks he is playing games. Just as father chimp is about to give up, love comes into Sidney's life when a winsome flirty girl elephant passes by. The chimp is overjoyed, rushes home to tell his wife the glad news that Sidney has left them to take up married life on his own. His joy is short lived, however, as Sidney and his bride appear and announce that they have decided to come and live with them until they can get on their feet. EXCELLENT. (5812).

SIGNED, SEALED AND CLOBBERED. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Terrytoons. 6m. Apartment house superintendent Clobber tries to enforce the 'no pets allowed' edict; and evict a tenant and his trained seal. In the ensuing chase Clobber gets mixed up in an audition the tenant had set up for the seal with a television m.c. This proves a hit; but the tenant, now that he is in the money, leaves with the seal to find a fancier apartment, declaring that "any fat clown" can take Clobbers part in the act. GOOD. (5811).

THE TALE OF A DOG. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Terrytoons. 6m. While fleeing from the law a dog inadvertently becomes dressed in a long jacket and hat. He is mistaken for a small man and obtains work in a frankfurter plant. He has a spectacular rise in the company; but finally his identity as a dog is revealed. The owner, however, says "I don't

CINEMASCOPE COLOR NOVELTY

BLUE WATER SPORTS. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Novelty. 9m. In DeLuxe Color this covers the annual blue fin tuna tournament off the island of Bimini in the Bahamas. Some of the shots are amazing with the winner catching over 5,000 pounds of the great fish. This should be a natural for fishermen, sportsmen. GOOD. (7811).

FIREWORKS FOR FREEDOM. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Novelty. 10m. In DeLuxe Color this shows at Ft. Bliss, El Paso, how the men are trained to use the Army's tracking rocket, the Nike. The film then moves on to bases in Los Angeles, Chicago, New York and Washington, D. C. The Department of Defense and the Army assisted in making this subject. GOOD. (7813).

FOOTBALL ROUNDUP. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Novelty. 10m. Highlights of the past season's games are shown. This is of limited appeal to followers of the sport and will tend to become dated more so than other subjects in this series. It is, however, actionful and well edited, and should mean something particularly in college towns. FAIR. (7902).

UNDERSEA ADVENTURE. 20th-Fox CinemaScope Novelty. 10m. In DeLuxe Color this underwater subject has a boy and a girl equipped with skin-diving equipment, searching the depths off the coast of the British West Indies for treasure in old wrecks; and fishing with automatic underwater spears. GOOD. (7812).

SPORTS

AQUATIC CARNIVAL. Columbia—World Of Sports. 9m. Bill Stern takes us to the western desert for a diving exhibition at the new Stardust Hotel, Las Vegas. The divers and the curvaceous showgirls decorating poolside are most attractive. FAIR. (3804).

Selling A Religious Pic to Churches

THEATRE: State

ADDRESS: Statesville, N. C.

MANAGER: Helen Johnson

Our recent campaign on Howco's "I'll Give My Life", a small picture lacking in star value, but one that is so sincere and genuine that the church people will heartily endorse it and help you sell it, resulted in it playing eight days something that only three other pictures succeeded in doing.

We mailed invitations to 94 ministers, enclosing 20 passes with each invitation to be distributed to Sunday School teachers for an advance screening. The screening was held on a Thursday morning as requested by contacting the Statesville Ministerial Association office. All invitations were mailed 10 days prior to the screening, thus giving ministers a Sunday to distribute them.

An ad was placed in a Saturday newspaper telling Sunday School teachers about the screening just in case the ministers forgot to give them their tickets. This ad was placed on the church page.

We included at the screening the 20th-Fox two-reeler "Land Of The Bible"; and immediately after the short the show was stopped and a speech made to the over 200 present about both the short and the feature which followed. We told them frankly that it was a small picture that needed their help in getting people to see, that is if they thought it good enough to recommend. After the screening I had special posters and heralds available in case they would like to take some back to their churches with them. Comment cards were handed out after the screening and over 60 were received with permission to use their remarks in our advertising. About one half of the posters, 14"x22", and half of the 4,000 heralds were taken after the screening for distribution in churches. Many ministers said they would encourage their congregations to be sure and see the picture.

Over half the churches had a notice in their church bulletins calling attention to the religious picture playing next week at the State. This was unsolicited. Word was received that many of the teachers took their lesson on Sunday from this picture.

A radio station announcer had a tape recorder in the lobby after the screening and recorded personal comments from ministers and Sunday School teachers. These comments were used in a special edited three minute spot announcement which was used later.

The large turnout at the screening rated notices in the daily newspaper and local news over WSIC radio. Naturally, we had to contact them and have it planted.

We used in all a total of 30 spots on the local radio station. The timing of these were specially selected for only the times of religious programs on WSIC. Many told us they thought the spot was part of the religious programs and that, indirectly, made it appear that various ministers were recommending this picture. On Sunday spots were used at every hour from eight to 12 in the morning to sell to the churchgoers.

Wells Fargo Express never had it so good! These two cowgirl-clad young ladies were part of the recent street bally directing attention to the San Francisco opening of United Artists' "Man Of The West," United Artists Theatre.

The Exchange Club of Statesville were sponsoring their annual house to house canvas selling napkins on the Friday before our opening. We gave them a one frame advertisement on our screen in exchange for their members distributing approximately 1500 heralds on the film throughout all areas of the city.

We made a special display board for the lobby using comment cards from the special screening, a one sheet and playdate strip for the week preceding playdate. During playdate, this was used in front of the theatre.

A different approach was used in our newspaper ads. Comments of local ministers and Sunday School Teachers were used. We tried not to use the same comment twice since we had so many comments. This was done to get the greatest number of persons in town to recommend the picture. Also, in our pre-opening ad we used the group sales gimmick—special admission prices for Sunday School groups of 10 or more. Many groups did purchase tickets in blocks.

For one week in advance and for the first three days of the playdate a comment by a local person attending the screening was used in the "Want Ad" columns of the paper in the personal announcement column. This created a great deal of talk since a lot of churchgoers are infrequent moviegoers. We had to get this picture advertised to them in some way; and I felt this was one of the best ways.

Approximately 75 window cards were distributed to leading stores in the downtown area.

One independent super market called and asked for additional heralds to distribute to persons purchasing groceries at his store. He attended the screening and it sold him on the picture and he wanted to help us sell the picture so more people would see it and his comments over the taped interview was that we should play more pictures of this type.

It was indeed a very successful campaign and it is one picture that will create a lot of good will for a theatre in tying in with the churches in the town.

EXPLOITATION—an encyclopedia of useable exploitation stunts—is published every other week as a section of Motion Picture Exhibitor.

Highlights of John J. Parsons recent campaign on Walt Disney's "White Wilderness," Tele-news, San Francisco, Cal., were a tieup with Pictsweet Frozen Foods, who furnished this 15,000 pounds of blown ice for an atmospheric sidewalk display, among other things; and the use of some live animals for opening day bally such as the tiger shown visiting a cooperating jewelry store.

Artificial Snow, Wild Animals Used As Bally

THEATRE: Telenews,
ADDRESS: San Francisco, Cal.
MANAGER: John J. Parsons

Our campaign on Disney's "White Wilderness" started four weeks ahead of playdate and highlights were the placing of two posters bearing playdates in every school in the city—268 posters in all; and a tieup with Pictsweet Frozen Foods.

Pictsweet sent 12,000 mailing pieces to all grocers in four counties; and furnished us with a mountain of artificial snow, 15,000 pounds of blown ice, at a cost of some $2,500. To this was added a pretty live model attired as a snow-bird; and a few gimmicks including a north pole; and it made a traffic stopping sidewalk display in front of the theatre.

Huge window displays also resulted from this tieup with markets; while other window displays were set with San Francisco's leading department store, a jewelry store, etc.

For opening day bally we obtained a live tiger, a lion and a bear and paraded them (carefully, of course) around town and had them on television. The bear was used for a contest "Guess the weight of this bear and win a freezer." This was more Pictsweet coop promotion.

Another old contest stunt was adapted. This was guess when the giant cake of ice will melt? gimmick and was used in a tieup with a local jeweler, who gave a man's and lady's watch as prizes.

Thousands of free inches of newspaper editorial space was secured, as well as column items in the various newspapers.

In all, 200 super markets in the four counties were tied-up on the Pictsweet deal.

Figuring conservatively there were 148 radio and TV spots; and a $45,000 price tag was placed on the campaign if purchased. It all came to the theatre FREE.

DO SAVE . . . EXPLOITATION

Published at every-second-week intervals, these classified and indexed promotional stunts are cumulatively numbered and indexed, and are punched for permanent filing. Establish your own encyclopedia on exploitation!

NUMBER 49

Happiest Secretary Contest

THEATRE: Gaumont
ADDRESS: Falkirk, Scotland
MANAGER: Anthony W. F. Wall

As Debbie Reynolds appears as a secretary in "This Happy Feeling" I felt this angle could be the basis of an unusual contest and I organized a search for Falkirk's "happiest secretary." I sent personal messages outlining the contest to local businessmen asking them to nominate their secretary if she gave her fellow workers "This Happy Feeling."

I persuaded the press to cooperate and 250 leaflets were distributed.

A local jeweller donated a silver charm bracelet bearing replicas of two suitable charms—a telephone and a typewriter as a prize and a florist provided a bouquet of flowers. These were presented to the winner the week prior to playdate and the winner was invited to attend the opening performance.

I also organized a "Happy Feeling" contest. The manager of the Falkirk Football Club agreed to present a football autographed by the team as a prize for the boy writing the best letter stating which local footballer gave him "This Happy Feeling." Leaflets were distributed on the football grounds and at the theatre and for two weeks before playdate the contest was announced over the public address system before football matches. The ball was presented to the winner at the theatre by the player of his choice. Resulting press coverage was most gratifying.

The Ghosts Are Stirring Again

THEATRE: Fox Oakland
ADDRESS: Oakland, Cal.
MANAGER: Jack McDougall

Highlights of our recent campaign on Allied Artists' "House On Haunted Hill" were a lobby and foyer display featuring coffins complete with king sized skeletons and tombstones bearing the inscription: "Here lies the body of Frisby Quill. He went to see 'House On Haunted Hill.'"

Cardboard skeletons were worn by all employees as lapel banners. When asked any questions about the coming attraction, the employees were instructed to say, "Joe? Joe, who. EMERGO . . . etc."

The glass doors across the front were painted with cobwebs, bats, skeletons, etc. Windows and back door of boxoffice bore cutouts of "Haunted House." Mirrors over drinking fountains were pasted with cut-outs from one-sheet. And we pasted down three-sheets in the lobby near the sidewalk.

We tipped off "The Daily Knave" columnist of the Oakland Tribune that one of our tombstones was stolen, while an adjacent exhibit, a coffin with a skeleton inside, remained untouched. He went for the gag, commenting that "Ah well, its understandable. Everyone can use a tombstone—but who needs a skeleton? Mr. MacDougall has a lot to learn about U.C. undergrads."

We also spotted a gratis "guest tickets" guessing contest over three local radio stations.

NUMBER 51

A Cat Contest

THEATRE: Orpheum
ADDRESS: New Orleans, La.
MANAGER: Asa Booksh

What recently started out as a nice little cat contest for Columbia's "Bell, Book and Candle", turned into a major event that gave us one of the best promotions we ever staged.

With a cat playing a major role in the film, we decided to stage a cat contest on a Saturday morning. Calls were placed for contestants in the "want ad" sections of the local papers and then the fun began.

Columnist Maude O'Bryan, States-Item, picked up the story and played it big. The Puss 'N' Boots cat food company supplied prizes and ran several display ads boosting the contest. The local Royal Crown Cola bottler joined in by offering six-packs to everyone who entered a cat.

Further publicity came when all cats who played "Pyewacket" and local girls who played the Kim Novak role in theatre group versions of "Bell, Book and Candle" were invited to attend.

Several hundred cats and owners showed up; and both papers played it big with pictures. A local TV station covered the event.

The Largest Family Contest

THEATRE: Paramount
ADDRESS: Des Moines, Iowa
MANAGER: Dick Gray

For 20th-Fox's "The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker" we recently held a contest to find the largest family in the greater Des Moines area. This was held over radio station KIOA.

The contest ran for nine days and we received one spot an hour, every hour of the day, for the nine days. The radio spot was, of course, a selling piece for the picture as well as giving the contest details.

The largest family consisted of 11 children and the parents, making an even baker's dozen of 13.

A Volkswagon, appropriately bannered, was promoted and picked up the family at their home. Then, the family was taken to dinner at a local restaurant through a tie-in. After dinner they were taken to see the movie.

In addition to their night out on the town the family was given a four-speed record player, which was promoted, for their home.

This contest was very successful and resulted in a great deal of gratis publicity.

Home-Made Theatre Fronts

THEATRE: Ohio
ADDRESS: Lorain, Ohio
MANAGER: Dick Kline

We have found that one of the biggest attention getters is our false fronts.

For such a small cost we can attract more business than by buying full page ads or buying hundreds of spots on the radio.

For example, for $23, a hammer and saw and a few hours of work a false front can be made similar to the ones we have used many, many times. There are many art stu-

Texas COMPO Offers Promotional Packages

DALLAS—It was announced by Kyle Rorex, Executive Director of Texas COMPO, that the Texas organization has created and will make available immediately six promotional packages.

The campaign packages have been designed for the express purpose of stimulating confidence in theatre personnel which will reflect enthusiasm to the public thus building appreciation of the motion picture industry and especially forthcoming product.

Campaign package number one, through the medium of a 60 second trailer, multi-color 40x60 display and composite mat, endorses a particular picture with the Manager's Seal which means the manager is personally recommending and guaranteeing the picture as top entertainment. All the materials bear the signature of the manager.

In campaign package number two the 60 second trailer, multi-color 40x60 display and composite mat announce a money-back guarantee of the coming top attraction and bears the signature of the manager. A post script to the trailer is added to the trailer to lead into the regular scene trailer of the picture being advertised.

The third campaign package also offers a 60 second trailer, multi-color 40x60 display and composite mat, all of which convey the manager's personal endorsement and guarantee of an unexcelled motion picture, complete with the manager's signature. A post script on the trailer is a lead into the regular scene trailer of the advertised picture.

The number four campaign package, containing a 60 second trailer, multi-color 40x60 and composite mat, headlines the phrase "Nothing Finer Than '59er Movies" and declares the big new movies seen on today's movie screens will not be seen on TV for years and years and maybe never and includes five trailerettes listing coming pictures.

The fifth campaign package consists of a special one minute trailer, a multi-color 40x60 display and composite mat outlining the efforts of the management to make the theatre the finest place in town for the patron to find enjoyment and pleasure and ends with the theatre manager welcoming any suggestions from the audience as to how the theatre can be made more comfortable and enjoyable. The materials bear the signature of the manager.

Campaign package number six contains a 60 second trailer, multi-color 40x60 display and composite mat which announce a season of outstanding motion pictures. The trailer includes five trailerettes of coming attractions.

The copyrighted campaign packages can be ordered at the production cost from Texas COMPO, 2013-A Young Street, Suite 208, Dallas 1, Texas.

dents around schools or doing spare time work who will be glad to paint a front for you, utilizing cutouts from regular National Screen Service paper.

We use a false front on every possible occasion and I would be willing to bet it increases the boxoffice. The most important thing is the theatre looks alive and people will stop and look instead of quickly passing by.

No picture is too big that it can't draw a little more attention and thus prove bigger. Here is an example of the power of these false fronts. Every day, six days a week, my cashiers will call 15 names from the telephone directory. They ask the person answering what is playing at the Ohio. If they know, they receive two free passes. If they do not know, the cashier tells them. In checking to find out how they know, we have found we give away more passes when we have a front, and they give this as the reason they know.

Every theatre should use these false fronts; and the cashier's checking is a good advertising medium.

Animated Lobby Display Always Good

THEATRE: Palace
ADDRESS: Gastonia, N. C.
MANAGER: H. M. Kilpatrick

For a recent re-run of one of the older Elvis Presley features I came up with a novel animated lobby display that had better than desired results.

While buying gasoline at a service station where I trade I noticed an animated display in the window so I got the idea that if I could promote the use of the motor and equipment attached to this display I might adapt it to my own needs. He agreed to the loan and I then got one of the six-sheets on the Presley film, cut out his figure and mounted it on cardboard, making sure to cut the figure in two parts at belt level. I already had built a frame at the exact height needed to place the motor and attachments so as to have the arm from the motor at exactly Mr. Presley's midsection. I mounted the moving parts, and then used material cut out from posters as background display with title and playdates on either side. I also used a soft light directly in back of the cut-out. Then I plugged the motor in and cut the switch to see what I had. Believe it or not, Mr. Presley did his hip swinging gyrations perfectly. He did little if any better on the screen.

This display was set up at an angle at one end of the outside lobby where it could be viewed from the sidewalk as well as by patrons. I placed a color wheel about 15 feet away and used a spotlight in the lamp-house of the color wheel and directed this on the display.

The display was in operation from 8 a.m. daily until midnight; and I can truthfully say I never had a lobby display that created more interest. Everyone wanted to know how I made Elvis wiggle at just the right place.

The entire thing cost me less than $5.

Save Ticket Stubs Like Savings Stamps

THEATRE: Sky Drive-Ins,
ADDRESS: Adrian, Mich.
MANAGER: Bill Jenkins

Here is a simple, home-made stunt that has helped business considerably at our drive in.

We printed a bristol covered 4 x 5 1/4 inch booklet containing eight pages called "Ticket Stub Saver." This cost us nothing as the makers of the products sold at the concession stand each took an ad, with the back cover sold to a bank, an insurance company and a gas distributor.

Each page has a few lines advertising the merits of drive-ins printed over 12 squares. The patron simply pastes his stubs in the squares, in the same manner as savings stamps are pasted in books at supermarkets, etc. When the book is filled it is good for any one of a number of gifts listed separately.

These gifts are bargains we pick up locally such as cameras, appliances, etc.

Four stub numbers are posted each night on a bulletin board in the concession stand. These entitle the lucky holders to special premiums.

The stunt has caught on and the patrons are really saving their stubs in order to obtain the prizes.

20th-FOX has launched a pre-selling campaign for "The Diary of Anne Frank" aimed at a wide range of media on an international level. In addition to customary channels of advertising, the film will be sold via European editions of the New York Times and Paris Herald Tribune as well as Far Eastern editions of the Times, Ships newspapers, covering crossings on both coasts; theatrical publications of every type, including The New York Playbill; metropolitan weekly and foreign language papers and religious and fraternal publications. No media will be ignored in bringing "Anne Frank" to the attention of the potential audience for the premiere engagement of the picture and for subsequent engagements around the country and throughout the world.

MGM, Seventeen Magazine and five leading manufacturers will participate in a major nationwide tie-in to promote "Green Mansions." The promotion to be launched by a six-page, four-color advertising portfolio in the April issue of Seventeen, will be conducted through movie theatres and leading department stores in 24 major cities from coast to coast. It will band together the advertisements of major dress, sportswear, lingerie, fiber, and perfume manufacturers and will be coordinated by the theme, "inspired by MGM's 'Green Mansions'." The participating department stores will co-operate in the joint promotion with local advertising, special events, and in-store promotions. To coordinate the special events programs MGM field representatives will set up promotions between stores and theatres in tie-in cities.

"Showman-of-the-Year" CONTEST

Each individual achievement, selected by the Editorial Board and published in this every-second-week EXPLOITATION Section of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, will receive an Achievement Citation. Five by the same showman published in any one year will receive a SILVER Achievement Citation. And, should any showman ever accomplish ten in the same year, a GOLD Achievement Citation will be awarded. No weekly or monthly prizes will accompany such citations.

At each year's end, all such published achievements will be submitted to the "COMMITTEE OF 100" theatre circuit executives for their individual study and their personal choice of the BEST FIVE. A minimum of

will be awarded to the five "SHOWMEN-OF-THE-YEAR" so selected. Alert showmen, interested in the international distinction to be gained from such awards, will recognize that an advantage lies in winning repeated individual published achievements. Address all submissions and photographs to: GEORGE F. NONAMAKER, Feature Editor, MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, 246-48 N. Clarion Street, Philadelphia 7, Penna.

There was plenty of comment generated recently in San Francisco on this street bally for Columbia's "Good Day For A Hanging" at the Paramount. The gallows was moved about the city with a local radio station giving the locations and offering free speaking time to persons wishing to give their opinion of capital punishment.

HOUSE CLEANING

sure not to run out. As a result, our store-room was cluttered with a little of this and a little of that. So we advertised a house-cleaning give-away—some big gifts, some small, some useful, some novel; but something for everybody. We took some small sized candy sacks and put the small items in them. Then we made some cards up calling attention to the bigger things and put them in other sacks. We bought five big prizes to add to the interest and displayed them in our snack bar for some time prior to the give-away. We stapled the sacks to the wall in the snack-bar and numbered them to correspond to the tickets given at the gate. Everyone had to come in and claim their sack. We filled the place up and figure the cost was about seven cents per ticket even considering that we were giving some things we had no further use for.

When we showed "Country Music Holiday" we advertised a "Country Music Contest." We have a concrete dance slab in front of our concession stand and have 100 chairs on the patio. Customers started coming two hours early in order to get a chair to watch the contest. Our snack bar gross for the night was about four times the usual amount for a mid-week night. We gave three prizes of $5, $4, and $3, and, except for a lot of talking and promoting, that was our entire cost. The gate receipts were about 300% and everybody seemed to have a very good time with comment most favorable.

Recently we bought some large sized stuffed pandas and French poodles for give-

Filmack Presents Big, New Drive-In Promotion Catalog

NEW YORK—Filmack Trailer Company's 1959 promotion catalog for drive-ins has been issued.

According to Filmack head Irving Mack, "There isn't a single phase of drive-in promotion, from opening day to closing day, that is missing from this year's catalog."

The new catalog contains a large number of ideas to increase ticket-sales, including welcome trailers, institutional advertising, give-aways, playgrounds for kiddies, and many special audience building events.

Refreshments, too, come in for their full share of merchandising gimmicks, and the concessionaire will find a promotion to fit every product he sells from popcorn to pizza.

UNSOLICITED • The letters from readers which appear on this page are not solicited. MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR does not suggest questions to readers in order to provide a flow of letters.

From CRAIGSVILLE, W. VA.

Could you please tell us whether or not exhibitors have good luck in collecting for screen advertising directly from merchants, when such advertising is sold directly to such merchants by the theatre staff? In other words, what are their experiences in dealing directly instead of through one of the Motion Picture Advertising agencies?

ARDEN A. RICHARDS
Craigsville Drive In Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: If the usual advertising contract is used, and if there are no high-pressure or other objectionable methods applied, there is no reason why the theatre manager's sales shouldn't enjoy even better credit. The theatre is local, patronizes local supply sources, and employs local help. As such, it enjoys a community of feeling and a camaraderie that no stranger can equal. But what do others think? Has anyone had experience?

From KILGORE, TEX.

We appreciate very much the Achievement Citation awarded to us last year, and that awarded to us again this past February. Your EXPLOITATION section has also been of much help to me on many occasions.

Enclosed is the front page of our local newspaper, where you will note a write-up on our recent award. Thank you very much.

W. G. RIKE, Manager
Crim Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: The newspaper enclosed was the Kilgore News Herald, and we congratulate Mr. Rike for taking advantage of the opportunity to make the front page. Whether at the boxoffice, in publicity, or in cash prizes, all theatremen benefit from EXPLOITATION.

From OWINGSVILLE, KY.

Regarding my current ACHIEVEMENT CITATION from your EXPLOITATION section, it is gratifying to know that a 250 seat "shootin' gallery" in a village of 927 souls, is given the same consideration as the largest theatre.

JIM DENTON
Majestic Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: There is no size on showmanship. Unless it can be measured in originality and sweat.

From SOUTH DAYTONA, FLA.

Concerning the re-editing and re-publishing of your survey on "THE SLIDING SCALE METHOD," we want to add an emphatic "YES!"

We had not known that this survey was originally prepared and we would like even an old copy if obtainable. We would be happy to pay for it.

in the Feb. 25 issue. It so happened that the writer had just come from a meeting with the Municipal Juvenile Judge, together with the other theatremen of this City as invitees, as well as the local Police officers and Juvenile authorities. Due to this meeting, one or two of our profession will be asked to serve on the Juvenile Council which the Judge is setting up. It is satisfying to know that, instead of being a target for criticism, theatremen will have a voice in the decisions that will be made to assist the youth of our community.

No. 1 Drive-In Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: It is a pleasure to be helpful and useful. The re-editing work has started. We hope to re-publish early in April.

437 LETTERS from interested industry execs were published on this page last year.

Each and every one contributed to our readability and interest. We're grateful to their writers!

MORE LETTERS than any other trade paper are published here because MORE LETTERS are received here. It's as simple as that!

We think you might find a grin or two in the following GENERAL ORDERS issued to the organization of this theatre:

PLAN OF RETREAT FOR SATURDAY MATINEES

1. When main assault comes through the doors, Pvt. Agnes Paczkowski (cashier) will sound General Quarters. Everyone will man Battle Stations. Gen. Phil Garber (owner-manager) will give command to Retreat. Two routes of escape: (1) out back exits; (2) over roof.

2. Lt. Stuart Wilson (second assistant) will provide holding action until all have disengaged. Women, Pvt. Agnes and Pvt. Carole Simac (candy stand), will evacuate first, as soon as Retreat is sounded.

3. Capt. James Zournitzes (asst. manager) will blast exits with hand grenades if necessary. Pvt. Kenny Delaca (usher-candy boy) will hold candy counter as long as possible and then withdraw.

From PHILADELPHIA, PA.

I think you will agree that the following editorial that appeared in the Feb. 15 issue of GRIT is most interesting.

SEE A MODERN MOVIE!

"Announcement that Montoursville's theatre will show films only on weekends because of decreased patronage points up once again the troubles motion picture houses are encountering here and throughout the nation. The theatres in Williamsport and in other Central Pennsylvania communities are among our most valuable entertainment assets. However, a lot of us have overlooked the fact as we sit in our living-rooms watching what seems to be an endless round of westerns and mysteries on 21-inch screens.

"For a real change of pace, take in a motion-picture regularly. You'll find, as Hollywood asserts, that 'movies are better than ever.' And, to your great relief, you won't get a commercial every few minutes, just when the plot becomes absorbing and your interest intensifies."

Wouldn't it be nice if all newspaper editors felt the same way about our business?

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is particularly interesting because of the importance of GRIT. A weekly, published in Williamsport, Pa., for the past 76 years, it is reputed to be "the largest and most complete Independent Family Weekly in the world." Weekly distribution in 1958 averaged 1,054,402 copies delivered by over 30,000 dealers and salesboys in 16,000 cities, towns and villages at 15 cents per copy. This is quite a friend to have!

What do "I" know about Percentage Buying? Good question! Why not bring the matter up to date as per your lead editorial in the issue of Feb. 25?

Of course, there may be no place for a formula in the future. I'm afraid it will be all a matter of 50%, 60%, or 70%, with something new under the sun coming along with "PORGY AND BESS," if it should turn out to be a top film. Perhaps I'm a pessimist!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Because each new percentage bite seems to be accompanied by more theatre closings, maybe distributors will get a little more generous so they will have some theatres to sell.

COLUMBIA FACES THE FUTURE WITH CONFIDENCE

ELSEWHERE in this issue, Columbia draws attention to some 28 big-time story properties that they have assembled, and that they will make into 28 big-time motion picture productions in the months ahead. Many millions of dollars have been invested in these novels and stage plays, and on 23 of them it will be noted that top-flight production personalities have already been obtained. Many, many more millions of dollars will need to be spent, in scripting, in casting, in technical work, and in merchandising effort, before all 28 of these properties will face their first-runs, and the hoped for acceptance of the general public.

These are the responsibilities of motion picture producers.

These are the obligations that place such a great load on the shoulders of experience, judgment, and caniness in this industry of ours. But the new management group at Columbia, in combination with some of the industry's most enterprising independent producers, with which they have surrounded themselves, is measuring up. Starting with known books, and with known plays, they gain an impetus in the battle for the public's amusement time and amusement dollars that makes the odds quite a bit shorter.

With such an operating philosophy, Columbia can face the future with confidence.

THERE ARE TIMES WHEN YOU MUST FIGHT "CITY HALL"

A FRIEND OF OURS, down North Carolina way, has just put his finger on a "cancer" that he considers to be much more damaging to the industry's future than free TV; or than this industry's sale of its picture backlogs to free TV. His gripe is the use of the local High School's auditorium, gymnasium, pool, or other facilities — paid for and supported by his tax dollars — as a commercial competitor to his theatre four and five nights each week.

He isn't complaining about events that are conducted by the student body, by its P.T.A., or by the teaching staff, as a part of the school's curricular activities or educational and recreational work. He is content to back such things 100 per cent and even to give them the benefit of any help or co-operation he can. But he resents non-licensed and non-tax-paying outside operators, often under the guise of some non-existent charitable organization, who are permitted to use the high school's facilities for a small flat rental, or an even smaller percentage deal.

In his area, it seems a steady stream of such promoters have been booking in dance bands, all-night sings, personal appearances, travelling stock companies, professional sports events, etc., pretty nearly every night in the week. They charge from $1.00 to $2.00 for some pretty inferior amateurish attractions, and with a per-night "nut" that is lower than that of the much smaller theatre, plus the unlimited free parking that is not permitted to the theatre, they are cleaning up.

And they are wrecking the license-paying and large-tax-paying theatre's business.

This is the kind of situation that invites a tax-payer's suit. We doubt if the school boards have the right to turn their school properties into rented halls or parking lots. State by state their right to do so should be tested.

We think it can be stopped!

There are times when you must fight "City Hall".

PRETTY SOON NO MORE JAPANESE

BACK DURING World War II there was a story of the old Chinaman who checked the news headlines each day only to find that 2,000,000 Chinese had been killed or captured as compared to only 50,000 Japanese being similarly eliminated from the battle potential. After about two months of similarly devastating proportionate losses, the old Chinaman shook his head and sagely observed: "Pretty soon no more Japanese!"

We got a somewhat similar reaction from some recently aired statistics.

It seems that the 1950 record-breaking TV set sales of 7,355,000 at a dollar value of $1,397,000,000, was topped in 1954 by sales of 7,409,000 sets at $1,042,000,000. It was again topped in 1955 by sales of 7,738,000 sets at $1,077,000,000. But 1956, 1957, and 1958 have shown staggering losses in volume, to the place that last year saw only 5,051,000 sets sold, for a gross dollar value of $686,000,000.

Such an eight year drop in annual gross of $711,000,000 and 2,307,000 in sets, in spite of an average unit set cost of $190 eight years ago as compared to $136 in 1958, should cause some slight jitters in the ranks of the electronics boys. In just a little more than the same eight years, we have lost about 6,000 roofed theatres but added another 4,000 drive-in ones.

It would seem that our odds are better than the Japanese.

But we need to stay in there and pitch!

Orderly Release Fights New "Orphan" Period

NEW YORK—In a message issued to everyone interested in the orderly distribution of quality product throughout the year, Edward L. Hyman, vice-president, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., who with Leonard Goldenson conceived the plan, reported progress in the last three years, but said that developments over this period have made it apparent that a new "orphan" period exists on which they are currently concentrating all efforts.

It has been found that the first calendar quarter of the year is generally very good, and that the third calendar quarter of the year, which includes the summertime, is also good, and comparable to the first quarter; that the second quarter is improving; but that the period from Labor Day to the year-end holidays has been extremely poor.

Accordingly, every distributor has been visited and presented with a plan calling for them to make available on Labor Day a blockbuster picture, and another one in late October or early November. The distributors are assured of exhibitor support by preferential playing time and the best terms, and a drive during the last four months of this year will be conducted.

The plan received a favorable reception from all the distributors and all have promised to cooperate, Hyman said.

Hyman stated, "Once again we have completed our annual tour of the Hollywood studios, and can say without reservation that the production future has never looked so bright, and the releasing schedule so orderly."

"With orderly distribution well on the road to realization, we come away from Hollywood with the conviction that there are three additional fundamentals which must be given serious consideration to lift our industry back to the top of the amuse-

Fox Revamps Distribution Setup

District Heads To Become Branch Managers; Increase In Local Autonomy Seen Aid To Higher Efficiency

By MEL KONECOFF
New York Editor

NEW YORK—At a hastily summoned press conference last week, Alex Harrison, general sales manager of 20th Century-Fox, announced a reorganization of the company's distribution setup in the interests of better "efficiency." From here on in, complete local autonomy will be vested in the company's branch managers except for special cases, and all supervision in the field will be eliminated, stated Harrison.

This means that all district sales managers will be reassigned and will become branch managers. Those holding the latter spots at present will be made assistants or otherwise absorbed within the organization. A few who have reached the retirement age may wish to do just that, he thought.

Harrison reported that two years of study convinced him and other executives that there was a need for reorganization, and he personally felt that one of the weaknesses of the present setup was that the local branch manager did not enjoy enough local autonomy, which has become a necessity due to changing conditions.

Besides, should home office intervention be necessary, improvements in travel and communications make this a relatively simple matter.

Said Harrison, "We believe the future of the company lies in our local managers rather than in over-supervision. Complete authority will be vested in our local branch managers to operate as they see fit, subject to policy directives."

The distribution head thought that this strengthening would serve the interests of producers and exhibitors much better than in the past. The move is also expected to be duplicated in the world-wide operations of the company.

The detailed changes will be announced in the near future. There is no change forthcoming in the production plans of the company nor are there any plans afoot to eliminate any exchanges in the company setup. Harrison thought that company personnel has already been streamlined to a point of peak efficiency.

Canada Joins "Oscar" Push

NEW YORK—Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Limited, and the Odeon Theatre Circuit, the two leading motion picture theatre chains in Canada, accepted the invitation of the MPAA advertising and publicity directors' committee to participate in the Academy Awards promotion.

Kits are being made available to Canadian exhibitors this year for the first time on the same basis they are being offered to the exhibitors in the U. S.

100 "Hot" Dates For Easter

NEW YORK—"Some Like It Hot," Marilyn Monroe's first film in three years, will open across the country for the Easter holiday in over 100 major situations, it was announced by William J. Heineman, United Artists vice-president in charge of distribution.

20th-Fox "Carnival" Tops First Sales Convention

NEW YORK—A nine-month "Carnival of Super-Entertainments," during which 20th-Fox will release an unprecedented number of multi-million dollar "blockbusters," was to be announced by general sales manager Alex Harrison at that company's three-day sales convention, which started Sunday at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

The three-day meeting was to be the first national sales convention the company had held since 1955. Sales parleys since that year have been confined to sectional sessions.

Spyros P. Skouras, president, was to address the convention.

The "Carnival of Super-Entertainments," which will run through Jan. 2, 1960, will represent the most ambitious drive sponsored by 20th-Fox to accelerate patronage for every type of theatre operation. It will be backed with a correspondingly extensive promotion effort, it was said.

Exhibs Favor Radio Portion Of BB Push

NEW YORK—The four exhibitor members of the executive committee of the Business Building Campaign, last week reaffirmed their desire for a start early this spring of the radio portion of the national campaign.

In a letter to Abe Montague, executive committee co-chairman, and MPAA representative on the Committee, Ernest G. Stellings, the other co-chairman, said that he had polled the exhibitors' representatives, and all asked that "as quickly as MPAA will match the $165,000 now available from exhibition, the operating committee be directed to get the radio campaign underway."

Stellings said he had contacted Horace Adams of Allied States, Sol Schwartz of MMPTA, and Harry Brandt of ITOA, and all stood with the decision at a January meeting that MPAA match "the approximately $165,000 now available from exhibition" to undertake the radio campaign.

"We all share with MPAA," Stellings said, "a disappointment that funds are not available at this time for the full campaign."

Thomas A. Pappas, newly elected member of the 20th Century-Fox board of directors, was recently named by president Spyros P. Skouras to the executive committee of the board.

U-I Now In Black, Stockholders Told

NEW YORK—Milton R. Rackmil, president, Universal Pictures, told stockholders at the annual meeting last week that the company, which was substantially in the red for the first quarter ended Jan. 31, is now in the black.

In referring to the sale for $11,000,000 of the Universal City, Cal., studios to Music Corporation of America, Rackmil said that it was "the best deal we could get. We had to get out from this tremendous studio overhead." He explained that U is leasing back "sufficient facilities to take care of our production needs for $1,000,000 a year for 10 years."

Universal has no set number of pictures on its production schedule, he said, noting that "since last August we have completed six pictures and are shooting four."

Rackmil revealed that U's only TV activity, beyond leasing backlog to TV and renting space, was in making TV spot commercials.

"We have no intention at the moment to affect a merger between U and its parent, Decca Records, but it is under consideration if any benefits are to be achieved," he said.

He also reported that the company's payroll was down "considerably."

Adolf Schimel, vice-president, reported that there were now "roughly 3,000 preferred and common stockholders."

U-I Elects Board

NEW YORK—The stockholders of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., at their annual meeting last week, presided over by Milton R. Rackmil, president, elected the following nine members to the company's board of directors:

N. J. Blumberg, Preston Davie, Albert A. Garthwaite, John J. O'Connor, Milton R. Rackmil, Budd Rogers, Daniel M. Sheaffer, Harold I. Thorp, and Samuel H. Vallance.

The designation of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. as the independent public auditors of the company for the fiscal year ending Oct. 31, 1959, was approved by the stockholders.

At the meeting, there were 873,626 shares, or over 90 per cent of the voting stock in the hands of the public, represented.

The board later elected the following officers:

N. J. Blumberg, chairman of the board; Milton R. Rackmil, president; Adolph Schimel, vice-president, secretary and general counsel; David A. Lipton, Edward Muhl and John J. O'Connor, vice-presidents; Felix M. Sommer, treasurer and assistant secretary; R. M. Miles, controller and assistant treasurer; Charles H. Stineford, assistant treasurer; and Morris Davis and Anthony Petti, assistant secretaries.

Illinois Exhibs Fight New Tax

CHICAGO—The industry here last fortnight was organizing a fight against a bill introduced in the Illinois House by Representative Joseph F. Fanta that would place a three per cent tax on the gross receipts of motion picture distributors doing business in the state.

The Missouri-Illinois Theatre Owners and the United Theatre Owners of Illinois, both affiliated with TOA, were leading the drive to defeat the legislation.

MGM Release Plans Set Through August

NEW YORK—MGM's release schedule has been completed through the current fiscal year ending Aug. 31st, with the over-all sales campaigns individually designed to achieve the maximum box-office potential of each picture, it was announced by John P. Byrne, vice-president and general sales manager.

The details were set following a week of conferences with Sol C. Siegel, vice-president in charge of production, and Benjamin Thau, administrative head of the studio, during which Byrne screened all the new product.

Byrne emphasized that as a result of the studio's long range planning policy, all pictures for the balance of the fiscal year have been completed. He cited "The Mating Game" as an example of the major consideration the sales department is giving to special handling, pointing out that the recent series of "Laugh Previews" resulted in more than 100 bookings within a one week period.

"Green Mansions," the Radio City Music Hall's Easter attraction, will be available for release at the end of this month.

In commenting on the overall release program, he stressed the variety of entertainment and name casts represented. Two top romantic comedies on the schedule feature four Academy Award nominees between them, "Ask Any Girl," starring Shirley MacLaine, David Niven, and Gig Young, and "Count Your Blessings," starring Deborah Kerr, Rossano Brazzi, and Maurice Chevalier.

"We are also convinced MGM has an extraordinary potential in 'The World, the Flesh and the Devil,'" Byrne said. "The film will be introduced with four pre-release premiere engagements in April prior to general release later in May."

Byrne was particularly enthusiastic about "North By Northwest," a July release, as a summer blockbuster, referring to the film starring Cary Grant, Eva Marie Saint and James Mason as "The best Alfred Hitchcock yet." The new Mario Lanza picture, "For the First Time," will be released in August to allow time to develop a long range campaign.

While at the studio, Byrne also discussed release plans with executives and producers on "Watusi," "The Beat Generation," and "The Big Operator."

UA Drive Leaders Named

NEW YORK—United Artists' Jacksonville, Toronto, and Winnipeg branches are leading their respective groups in the first lap of the company's Fortieth Anniversary Sales Drive, it was announced last week by co-captains James R. Velde, general sales manager, and Roger H. Lewis, national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

Managers of the leading branches are Byron Adams, Jacksonville; George Heiber, Toronto; and Abe Feinstein, Winnipeg. Canadian district manager Charles S. Chaplin leads in the district standings.

The 22-week campaign for collections, billings and play-dates will award more than $60,000 in cash prizes to the winners among the company's 33 competing branches in the United States and Canada.

Friedman Joins AA

NEW YORK—Chet Friedman has been appointed press representative for Allied Artists Pictures of Canada, Ltd. Friedman, whose appointment became effective March 2, is in New York for conferences on current product with executives and staff.

Wilmington License Bill Passed Despite Veto

WILMINGTON, DEL.—City Council passed 11-1 over Mayor Eugene Lammot's veto an ordinance fixing new license fees for all businesses including theatres.

Exhibitors will pay a base fee of $300 per year plus $1 per month for each employee above one working 10 days or more in any month.

The ordinance makes this retroactive to Jan. 1, with quarterly payments of the employee fee within 30 days after March 31, June 30, Sept. 30 and Dec. 31.

SEC Withdraws Action For Jacobs Receiver

NEW YORK—Hal Roach, Jr., last fortnight filed suit in Federal Court here seeking to recover 34,475 shares of Scranton Corporation common stock from Alexander L. Guterma.

The producer claimed that in October, 1958, he loaned the stock to Guterma, who at the time headed the F. L. Jacobs Company, of which Scranton was a subsidiary. He charged that Guterma pledged the stock with money lenders as collateral. The plaintiff said that he got the Scranton shares in May, 1958, in exchange for his stock, in his wholly-owned company, Hal Roach Studios.

Federal Judge Sidney Sugarman signed a stipulation under which the SEC agreed to withdraw its application for appointment of a receiver for the F. L. Jacobs Company; and the SEC's application for a preliminary injunction against the company was also withdrawn.

Jacobs agreed to add three directors to its present board of six. They are William H. Timbers, former general counsel for the SEC; attorney Milton Gould; and Lazarus Josephs, former comptroller of New York City.

Jacobs also agreed that there would be no division of company assets without the approval of six of the nine directors. One of these six, it was stipulated, must be either Timbers, Gould, or Josephs.

Roach, who previously had filed an affidavit protesting the SEC action to have a receiver appointed for the Jacobs Company, which controls Scranton, said, "I'm pleased that the court has seen fit to set up framework for Jacobs under which we can continue to operate as a progressive, going concern."

Boverman Exits Para. Post

NEW YORK—Sam Boverman, who has been in charge of Paramount Pictures New York and foreign production legal activities, has resigned after being associated with the company for 29 years. Boverman will continue the practice of law on a full time basis with the firm Margulies, Heit and Boverman.

For many years, Boverman has specialized and been recognized as an authority in the field of copyright law involving domestic and foreign motion picture production, literary, music, and allied phases of the entertainment industry. In 1954 he was the representative of the motion picture industry and advisor to the U. S. Registrar of Copyrights in attending the Ad Interim Committee meeting of the Universal Copyright Convention in Paris, France.

NEW YORK — With the separation of Loew's Theatres from Loew's, Inc., (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer), Leopold Friedman has been elevated to chairman of the board of Loew's Theatres, Inc., with Eugene Picker becoming president and chief executive officer, it was announced last week. In a further realignment of top management personnel, John F. Murphy, vice-president, was elected executive vice-president.

At the same time, two new vice-presidents were elected: Ernest Emerling, national director of advertising and publicity, and Arthur M. Tolchin, managing director and a director of the theatre company's broadcasting subsidiary, Radio Station WMGM, New York.

Friedman, Picker and Murphy continue as directors of the new theatre company, Loew's Theatres, Inc. The other directors are George Baker, president, National Airlines; Thomas J. Connellan, retired vice-president, First National City Bank of New York; and Thomas L. Norton, Dean of the New York University School of Commerce, Accounts, and Finance. The last three named were originally approved for election by the Federal Court.

The separation is in accordance with the plan of reorganization approved by the stockholders and the Federal Court as the result of a Consent Decree. Regular trading in theatre company shares began on March 13.

In a letter serving to introduce the new theatre company to stockholders, Friedman and Picker express optimism over the future of Loew's Theatres, Inc., as motion picture exhibitors and look forward to building a sound future through expansion and diversification.

"It is exciting and challenging," they say, "to be part of a venture which combines the vigor and optimism of a new enterprise with the wisdom and experience of an established company."

MURPHY

After graduation from the School of Law of New York University, Friedman became associated with the legal department of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises. When Loew's, Inc., was formed in 1919, he became secretary. In the mid-20s he was elected a director and, in 1945, vice-president. In 1954, with the physical separation of the theatre division from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, he was elected financial vice-president, treasurer, and a director of the theatre subsidiaries. In October, 1956, with the resignation of Joseph R. Vogel,

UA Sues U.S. Post Office Over "Unofficial" Ban On "Maja" Ads

NEW YORK—United Artists Corporation has brought suit against the United States Post Office over the mailing of reproductions of Francisco Goya's nude masterpiece, "The Naked Maja." The classic painting, which depicts a well-fed Spanish lady reclining in the altogether, is the subject of a strongly-worded action brought by United Artists against Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield. The affidavit filed in U. S. District Court for the District of Columbia and signed by UA vice-president Max E. Youngstein, avers that the decision of a New York postal official holding that the painting "would not meet the statutory requirements of mailability" has literally crippled the advertising campaign being mounted for UA's multi-million dollar motion picture, "The Naked Maja." Further, Youngstein asks that the Post Office be enjoined from making what he characterizes as "threats" to exclude ads containing the painting from the mails.

The affidavit cites an exchange of letters between UA general counsel Seymour Peyser and the office of the general counsel of the Post Office Department in which Peyser requested an immediate official Post Office Decision on the mailability of "Maja" ads. Herbert P. Warburton, general counsel for the Post Office Department, in his final reply, in effect refused to give a decision, and at the same time advised UA to attempt a mailing, adding that "the mailer must accept the risk for any violation of law which would be involved and of any action which might be taken as a result of such a mailing."

Youngstein's statement insists that the Post Office's position is one of "irony" and "pretense" resulting in the "unofficial" banning of ads containing "The Naked Maja" from the mails.

The battle began a few weeks ago when a New York Post Office official advised a trade paper that an ad containing the painting with no other copy than the painting's title, the painter's name and the UA trademark would make the publication unsuitable for mailing. After the Warburton letter, UA decided that its only recourse was legal action.

The Youngstein affidavit further points out the paralyzing effect of a film company being unable to place advertising in the public press.

United Artists is substantiating its case with an extended discussion of the importance of the Goya nude as one of the major works of art of all time. Pointing out that the identical painting (which now hangs in the Prado Museum in Madrid) has been widely distributed in popular publications over the years, the action against the Post Office encloses a series of exhibits including a two-page centerfold engraving of the painting printed in Life Magazine on Sept. 11, 1959 and a photograph of a popular Spanish postage stamp reproducing "The Naked Maja."

ACLU Charges Censorship In Post Office Action

NEW YORK—A Post Office Department ban on a newspaper advertisement reproducing the famous Goya painting, "The Naked Maja," was scored as "gross censorship" by the American Civil Liberties Union and its anti-censorship affiliate, the National Council on Freedom from Censorship.

The civil liberties groups called on Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield to re-

At the recent western regional meeting of international officers and representatives of Variety Clubs in San Francisco, plans were made for the annual convention to be held in Las Vegas commencing March 31. Fund Drive Starts Big

NEW YORK—"This year's industry participation in the Brotherhood fund-raising movement is heading for an all-time record on many counts," reported national chairman Alex Harrison last week.

This year's precedent-setting policy of leaving the date for local observance of Brotherhood Week to exhibitors is directly responsible for the high marks that are being established. This development is due to the fact that autonomy has provided exhibitors with considerably more time in which to organize and conduct local campaigns.

Results of audience collections in a vast majority of areas where Brotherhood Week has already been observed, have exceeded those of 1957 and 1958.

Because of the local autonomy policy, area exhibitor and area distributor chairmen have induced what unquestionably will be a record theatre participate. This year, more than 16,000 theatres will participate.

verse the decision of the Public Services Division of the New York Post Office that the advertisement of the nude classic was non-mailable. The ad was prepared by the United Artists Corporation to publicize its motion picture, "The Naked Maja."

ACLU executive director Patrick Murphy Malin and playwright Elmer Rice, chairman of the National Council, wrote Summerfield that the New York Post Office's action was a "prior restraint on freedom of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment." The civil liberties spokesmen added that the ban points up the need for determination of obscenity by courts where "carefully-considered evidence . . . can be tested in open court" rather than "one-man opinion based on personal taste or whim."

If the Post Office bars the Goya reproduction as harmful to the public, Malin and Rice argued, logic demands that the original painting and other classics be termed obscene and banned from view. Noting that such paintings are on display in museums throughout the world, they suggested that if an effort was made to remove such art or cover exposed portions of the human figure, "a thunder of public indignation—and ridicule—would greet such an effort."

Special Forums Set For Variety Convention

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—Five special forums calculated to contribute ideas that will enhance the activities of all Tents will be a new feature at the annual convention of the Variety Clubs International, it was announced by chief barker George Eby.

Edward Emanuel of Philadelphia, first Assistant international chief barker, is coordinator for these round table discussions which will mark a departure from the normal business meetings of the showman's organization.

Tracy Hare of Miami will lead a discussion on "Choosing a Charity Project"; a forum on fund raising will be chairmaned by Ralph Pries of Philadelphia; R. L. Bostwick of Memphis will spearhead a session on club financing. Aaron Seidler of Baltimore will be in charge of discussions on social activities; and a public relations discussion will be led by J. Raymond Bell of New York.

The informal meetings will be held on April 2 and promise to provide a lively interchange of ideas. The Variety convention, expected to attract a record registration of some 1500 members from all over the world, will get underway on March 31 in Las Vegas.

The international character of Variety Club membership will be accentuated with substantial delegations from many foreign countries heading for Las Vegas.

Eby reports that the London, England, tent will be represented by 26 barkers and barkettes, the largest number ever to attend the showman's conclave from any foreign country. Eby also reports that Dublin, Mexico City, and Toronto delegations, along with individuals from some eight other foreign lands, will swell the international representation.

Press Conference Set To Hypo "Oscar" Show

NEW YORK—Following a meeting of the MPAA ad-publicity directors committee last fortnight it was announced that a coast-to-coast closed circuit press conference in behalf of the April 6 simulcast of "Oscar" Night ceremonies which will utilize the facilities of NBC for a hookup of 200 TV stations and as many radio stations will be held on March 31.

Motion picture and TV editors in station areas will be invited to sit in for the "pep rally" program which will originate on the coast, with a pickup planned for New York. In addition, theatre operators and other industryites as well as station representatives will be in attendance.

It was announced that car card space had been available for Academy Awards promotion in New York, with the cards soon to be installed. Similar promotion is anticipated in other cities. Space has also been assured in railroad stations and at airports for posters.

Charles E. McCarthy, COMPO information director, outlined Academy simulcast field work being carried out, and it was said that the number of exhibitor orders for promotion kits would double last year's figure.

The committee agreed to support "within practical limits" the planned TV series in Providence, R. I., and named Jeff Livingston, Robert Ferguson, and Taylor Mills as a committee to work with Betty Adams of Station WJAR-TV.

Livingston, Joseph Gould, and McCarthy were named as another special committee to plan visitations to New York newspapers for the discussion of the handling of motion picture advertising and publicity.

The committee approved a books-into-films poster for use during National Library Week April 12-18.

Sidney Schreiber, MPAA general counsel, gave a comprehensive report on the pending censorship measures in New York and reviewed the recent hearing conducted by the Joint Legislative Committee. McCarthy presented members of the committee with copies of the brief filed by COMPO on behalf of exhibition.

It was announced that Arthur B. Krim, UA president, would accept on behalf of the industry a citation to be presented by the Israel-American Chamber of Commerce at its Hotel Biltmore dinner on April 8.

The revival of the radio project of the Business Building Campaign was discussed, with the subject then deferred pending a MPAA board meeting.

Exhibition is known to favor an early launching of the radio campaign if distribution approves the expenditure.

"Oscar" Contest Launched

NEW YORK—The New York World-Telegram and Sun will inaugurate an Academy Awards "Guess The Winners" contest this week with the first prize $2,000 in cash, and other awards totaling $1,500.

The contest will be heavily promoted during the voting period which will end on April 3.

Larry Merahn, promotion manager, will handle the contest, which Martin Dickstein, World-Telegram amusements advertising manager, said is being conducted because of the paper's conviction that movie interest among its readers remains high, and also as a means of promoting over a sustained period the work of the motion picture industry which its own members consider distinguished.

Columbia Readies 18 For Shooting To June 1 In Big Production Surge

Another 20 features are poised to go before the cameras in the last six months of the year. With the roster of independent production units at Columbia being bolstered continually, there is the prospect of even more production being scheduled before year's end. Lab Sale Ups Col. Net

NEW YORK—Columbia Pictures last week issued a comparative consolidated earnings statement showing $1,752,000 profit for the 26 weeks ended Dec. 27, 1958 as compared with an $820,000 loss for the 26 weeks ended Dec. 28, 1957.

No Federal income tax has been provided for the current period due to the loss carry-over of the prior year.

The net profit for the 26 week period ended Dec. 27, 1958 includes $2,622,000 representing the profit on the sale of the company's laboratory facilities at the West Coast.

The figures are subject to year-end audit by the company's certified public accountants.

"Juniors" Aid Hospital

ELIZABETH, N. J.—Twenty-eight Junior Achievement companies in the Union County-Cateret, N. J., area donated 112 shares of Junior Achievement company stock to the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital and Research Laboratories last week.

Col. Announces Reissue Of "Caine" And "Waterfront"

"On the Waterfront" and "The Caine Mutiny," two of the biggest money makers and most honored films in Columbia history, will be placed into re-release in April, it has been announced by Rube Jackter, vice-president and general sales manager.

Jackter noted that last year Columbia experienced huge success with its re-release of "From Here to Eternity," handled as if it were a new film, with entirely new advertising and promotion campaigns, and played by first-run theatres in key cities.

The pattern developed for the "Eternity" re-release will be followed for both "Waterfront" and "Caine," with new campaigns being completed for selling the two blockbusters either as singles or as a double-bill package.

Important attention is being paid to the radio spot commercials, as the air campaigns were credited with much of the success of last year's "Eternity" re-release.

Sharp Industry Reaction Results In Watered-Down N.Y. Censor Bills

ALBANY—As the Republican leadership broke the revolt of a group of assemblymen to Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller's pared but still record budget of $2 billion, and prepared to approve it preliminary to a drive for adjournment, Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material drew back on two controversial film bills which it had introduced, and amended two others affecting the industry.

The net result of the delay in passing the budget, and of the motion picture industry's resistance to the four measures—expressed at a February hearing in New York and reinforced by memorandums filed here—seemed to be that not more than one bill, and this a modified one providing for unpublicized classification of certain films by State Education Department's Motion Picture Division, had much chance of winning approval.

On to the legislative scrap heap went the Jerry-Murphy bill calling for the licensing of motion picture theatres at $10, and providing grounds for suspension or revocation of the license; Duffy-Younglove act defining the term "immoral" and the phrase "of such a character that its exhibition would tend to corrupt morals."

This definition is being challenged by Kingsley International Pictures Corporation in an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court on "Lady Chatterley's Lover," which the Regents banned and which State Court of Appeals upheld in a 4-3 decision.

Duffy-Meighan bill was amended to limit a ban on posters, banners, or newspaper or other advertising posters to four specified grounds. These are "obscene, indecent, lewd, or lascivious."

Also eliminated was a ban on persons, firms, or corporations "knowingly" exhibiting or offering to another for exhibition or advertising "any scene or dialogue purportedly but not actually in the motion picture advertised or any scene or dialogue eliminated from the motion picture by Motion Picture Division."

Finally, Duffy-Younglove classifications measure was watered down by deleting the provision that Motion Picture Division could require distributors and exhibitors when advertising the showing of films deemed "unsuitable for children" to "note" such classification.

Inserted as a replacement is the sentence: "The division shall maintain a record of all films so classified and shall publish, release, or otherwise disseminate information as to such classification at such times and in such manner as may be authorized or directed by the Regents."

Chairman Joseph R. Younglove and committee counsel James A. Fitzpatrick said, "Such a classification would be available for parents, educators, and those interested in youth."

Younglove commented that Motion Picture Division "appears to have functioned smoothly and to have rendered a genuine service to the public." Its value would be "enhanced" with the authorization for unpublicized classification of films "deemed undesirable for children within the school system."

The Johnstown legislator's statement referred to recent hearings and conferences on the problem arising from the production and advertising of certain types of pictures; of the "helpful information" supplied by the motion picture industry at the February

Md. House Kills Bill To Classify Films

ANAPOLIS, MD.—The House of Delegates last fortnight killed a bill seeking to limit the exhibition of certain films to adults only. The measure was defeated by a vote of 65 to 53.

It was expected that a motion would be made to have the bill reconsidered by the members of the House.

In another action, the House tentatively approved on a second reading a bill which would make it a misdemeanor to show or to participate in the showing of an obscene film to persons under 18 years of age.

The bill calling for the extension of the powers of the Board of Motion Picture Censors to restrict the showing of certain pictures to adults had gone to the House from the Judiciary Committee with a vote of 13 to 11 against it, while the other measure was reported favorably by the committee, 17 votes to two.

Battle Lines Drawn In Ohio Censor Fight

COLUMBUS, OHIO — Present state laws penalizing exhibition of "obscene" films are ineffective, it was declared last week by proponents of the O'Shaughnessy-Lynch film classification bill at the initial Ohio Senate Judiciary Committee hearing.

All called for enactment of the Bill which sets up adult and family classifications and provides penalties for misleading advertising. Industry opponents were to be heard at the next committee meeting (March 17).

"Fast buck operators would not be bothered by the meager penalties provided in the classification bill," said Senator Danny Johnson, New Philadelphia Democrat, committee member. He pointed out that present obscenity laws provide stiff sentences of from one to seven years in prison.

Senator O'Shaughnessy, Columbus Democrat and co-sponsor, said he is not a "busybody do-gooder and without sin," but said the bill is needed and is constitutional. He emphasized the bill gives the board no authority to reject films, only to classify them. He said films originally classified adult could be reclassified family if distributors make board-recommended deletions.

Support was expressed by Edward Honton, representative, 20-member Citizens For Decency, the Congress of Parents and Teachers, and others.

Under committee prodding, Stark admitted, "It's impossible to legislate morals" but declared the State has authority to regulate films.

hearing in New York.

Younglove praised motion pictures as "a great medium of entertainment," declaring, "It has made a very real contribution to our society and should certainly be maintained on a high plane." Years ago, the industry had drawn and approved a voluntary code of self regulation, with "a statement of principles and rules that leave little to be desired."

"Unfortunately, there are those who fail to subscribe to this code," Younglove continued, "and there are those who seemingly subscribe

TOA Resolves Fight On All Censorship

NEW YORK—A call for the motion picture industry generally, and exhibitors in particular to "vigorously protest and fight the infringements on their Constitutional rights" contained in the censorship bills now pending in at least seven states, was voiced last week by Theatre Owners of America.

President George G. Kerasotes released the text of a resolution condemning "these fallacious attempts of infringement on personal liberties" represented in pending censorship legislation. The resolution was adopted at the joint meeting of the board of directors and executive committee of TOA in Washington, D.C., on March 1 and 2.

Kerasotes said that the directors and executive committeemen directed that the resolution be drawn, and that its text was now being sent to all TOA members.

The resolution follows:

"Whereas, the United States Supreme Court has, on several occasions, decided that 'expression by means of motion pictures is included within the free speech and free press guarantees of the First and Fourteenth Amendments,' and,

"Whereas, it is contrary to the American way of life to have any person, group, or organization, usurp the right of the individual to determine for himself what he shall see, hear, say, and read, and,

"Whereas, censorship is abhorrent to the American tradition, and, to the history of democracy, and,

"Whereas, there is, at present, ample protection for the public in obscenity laws and ordinances, and

"Whereas, contrary to all the above basic principles, there have been numerous recent attempts at State levels to impose upon the motion picture industry the restraints of censorship, the control of advertising, and the classification of films, in such manners that the voice of a few people, or of special interests, will take upon themselves, through granted authority, to determine what is good, or not good, for their fellow men to see on the screen,

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Theatre Owners of America, Inc., voices its unalterable opposition to all attempts at censorship, direct or indirect, and that it calls upon the motion picture industry generally, and exhibitors particularly, vigorously to protest and to fight such infringements on their Constitutional rights, and that it pledges itself to assist its fellow exhibitors in attacking such legislation wherever and whenever it may be proposed; and,

"Be it further resolved that the Theatre Owners of America, Inc., employ all means available to it, to bring these fallacious attempts of infringement on guaranteed personal liberties to the attention of the public, and further, that it give the public knowledge and information that any such infringements may well spread to and undermine other media of communications."

but now seek to ignore it.

"Certainly many films are currently produced and advertised in a manner which appears inconsistent with the statement of both rule and principle embodied within the code," the veteran legislator declared.

Vigorous opposition to the proposed amendments was expressed in a strong wire sent to appropriate Legislative committees by a committee representing all branches of the motion picture business.

president of Loew's Theatres, he succeeded to that position.

The new president of Loew's Theatres, Inc., Eugene Picker, is a native New Yorker, and the son of the late David V. Picker, a pioneer in the motion picture industry. He began with Loew's as an usher at the Spooner, Bronx, later becoming assistant manager. In 1921, he joined Loew's film booking department, subsequently becoming assistant to David Loew, then chief film buyer and booker. Upon Loew's resignation in 1935, he succeeded to that position. In 1946, he was appointed general manager of all of Loew's New York operations, including the State and Capitol, on Broadway. In 1954, he was elected a vice-president of Loew's Theatres and, in 1956, a director. In September, 1958, he was elevated to executive vice-president.

EMERLING

John F. Murphy, new executive vice-president of Loew's Theatres, Inc., became a clerk in the accounting department in 1922, and week-end assistant at Loew's Hillside in Jamaica, and later, at Loew's Valencia. Subsequently, he became assistant to Joseph R. Vogel, general theatre executive, and aide to the late Col. E. A. Schiller, who was in charge of all Loew's Theatre operations. In 1954, he was elected a vice-president and, in 1956, a director.

Ernest Emerling, newly-elected vice president, and for the past 13 years the circuit's advertising-publicity chief, joined Loew's in 1920 as assistant manager. Loew's Dayton, Ohio, becoming Loew's youngest manager in 1924. Subsequently, he managed and supervised theatres in Birmingham, Dallas, and Memphis, becoming assistant publicity head in 1930. In 1946, he became head of the department.

Arthur M. Tolchin, also named vice-president, has been managing director and a director of Radio Station WMGM, Loew's Theatres' broadcasting subsidiary, since 1954. He joined the station, then WHN, as a salesman, in 1937. He became assistant director of sales in 1945 and was appointed director of sales in 1951.

Col. Promotes Blau

NEW YORK—The promotion of Martin Blau to the post of assistant publicity manager of Columbia Pictures has been announced by Robert S. Ferguson, director of advertising and publicity. Blau will aid publicity manager Hortense Schorr in supervising an expanded home office publicity staff and in maintaining liaison with publicity units in Hollywood and overseas production centers.

Blau has been with Columbia for eight years, the last four as trade press contact and news writer. Prior to joining Columbia, he had worked on daily newspapers in Ohio, Texas, and West Virginia.

Ferguson also announced that Isidore (Bud) Rosenthal will join the Columbia publicity department on March 30.

The NEW YORK Scene*By Mel Konecoff

PRODUCTION NOTE: With Harry Belafonte, Robert Ryan, Shelley Winters, Gloria Grahame, and Long Island's own Ed Begley in a picture that is being shot in the Bronx at Gold Medal Studios, that borough may never be the same. The other day, we got an invite to come up and watch some shooting on the set as well as to bend a sandwich with some of the principals. With no one else around to buy lunch this became a must.

We reached the studios in time to see producer-director Robert Wise shoot a scene for the film "Odds Against Tomorrow" with Ryan and Begley, and this man Wise has the respect and admiration of others on the set. This was eloquently transmitted to us by that talented assistant director, Don Kranze. Wise shot the scene quickly, quietly, and with authority.

Belafonte makes his debut as a United Artists independent star-producer in the film, the story of several desperate men and their women who plot a daring bank robbery to solve their personal financial problems.

Wise had praise for the efficiency of the New York crews, and he estimated that the film's cost would have been increased $200,000 to $300,000 if the film were made in Hollywood and if the cast had to come to New York for many scenes. His feeling about pictures? Make 'em and then sell the hell out of them. He labeled this one "a powerful melodrama of the times."

Belafonte reported that his production company was seeking all types of stories. This film has a lot to say about understanding among all people and is not a play on the Negro-white situation. It's not a message picture, opined he.

It's expected that the film will be ready for delivery to UA in June and could be released in the fall if UA so desires. Wise expected his next film may be one based on the story of Life photographer Robert Capa, killed in Indo-China. Belafonte may make a film based on Russian writer Alexander Pushkin, a Civil War film, "The Brothers," and mayhaps appear in the screen version of "The West Side Story."

Robert Ryan, who has a piece of the film, told us that as far as he's concerned production is the same all over when you're in front of the cameras, but that the crews here were younger. When the day's shooting was completed, he was off for Hollywood for six days with wife and family to celebrate his 20th wedding anniversary. Questioned about the demands of some talent, he did admit that the asking price of some was too high. Still, he said, they were entitled to get what they could. He has his own production company releasing through UA, and he was pretty happy over the anticipated four million dollar gross for his "God's Little Acre." He also has finished the unreleased-as-yet "Day of the Outlaw."

EXHIBITION NOTE: 1959, thus far, has several events of note marked on its calendar, and two are related. One is that Joe Sugar has become vice-president and general sales manager of Magna Theatre Corporation, distributors of "South Pacific," and the other is that that feature in Todd-AO is celebrating more than a year of playing on Broadway in addition to making its mark felt in over 50 other theatres throughout the country.

The number of dates was necessarily limited because that's all the houses equipped with Todd-AO equipment, give or take a few. Still, our people around the country tell us that those theatres have pulled in over 30 per cent of the moviegoing public every week at an admission scaled from $1.50 to $3.60.

On April 1, distribution will pass from Magna to 20th Century-Fox, who will take over the 35mm release, and undoubtedly Sugar will assist in this end as well. Meanwhile, we wouldn't be at all surprised if he doesn't join in the celebration of the contemplated first anniversary of the film on Broadway at the Rivoli, helping some Hollywood glamour cut a huge birthday cake in the lobby of the theatre.

CHARITY NOTE: Heeding the call of Spyros P. Skouras, the American Red Cross, and such top defense brass as General Nathan F. Twining and General Alfred Gruenther, representatives of local exhibition once again pledged to aid the efforts of the Red Cross to raise needed funds at a luncheon at the Metropolitan Club.

As several score of industryites, press representatives, Red Cross officials, and talented performers listened, Si Fabian, Sol A. Schwartz, Ernie Emerling, and Robert K. Shapiro promised to do their best both for themselves and for exhibition generally. Host Skouras hoped that the theatres would permit theatre collections to raise the industry's quota of $40,000.

Skouras was lauded for his humanitarian efforts on behalf of the cause, while General Twining reported on the effectiveness of the ARC with regard to the armed forces as well as on Defense Department policy in general. ARC head General Gruenther presented some of the functions, background, and needs of that organization.

Aboard the dais were John J. O'Connor, Schwartz, Thomas Hayward, Anita Colby, Riccardo Montalban, E. Roland Harriman, Rita Gam, Maureen O'Hara, Joseph Cotton, and others.

CARTOON NOTE: Dick Brandt, president, Trans-Lux Theatres and Trans-Lux Television Corporation, unveiled Felix The Cat, cartoon character, in a new series of films slanted primarily for TV but which may wind up in theatres abroad where TV is on a limited basis. The first subject as well as a look at the studios where the feline is turned out was shown to the press last week, with Trans-Lux sales vice-president Richard Carleton and head of the cartoon operation Pat Sullivan acting as guides and hosts.

They've developed a more economical method of cartooning there that has brought the costs of the episodes in color below established rates in the cartoon field, and we're only sorry that there isn't room for theatrical participation herein for American theatres. A number of TV deals have been set in various areas, according to Carleton.

THE METROPOLITAN SCENE: Leo Samuels, former president of Buena Vista, has completely recovered from a leg injury and will shortly announce his future plans.

"THE JAYHAWKERS"

"BUT NOT FOR ME"

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

A SLASHING ATTACK on sex and horror films and "That ghastly parade of nude subjects" was made by Kenneth More at the Critics' Circle Annual Dinner. He appealed for the return of the family picture as a solution to falling audiences. "We will get the family audience again with the family kind of pictures," he continued. "Our answer is to gain the respect of the public. It is not easy."

In lighter vein, Kenny spoke of the horrors of the week when a picture is press shown. After months of fun making the picture, he often wished it need not be shown. He described his experiences reading the various critics and added with undisguised relish after his thoughts regarding one—"Anyway, the paper's circulation is dropping!"

IT WAS a more subdued Sir Tom O'Brien than usual who addressed the Association of Cine and Television Technicians at their annual meeting—maybe it was the early hour on a Sunday morning. He spoke as chairman of the newly formed Federation of Film Unions and general secretary of the National Association of Theatrical and Kine Employees. In discussing the fabulous profits of the British commercial TV companies, he made a revolutionary suggestion.

Why not divert a proportion of the profits to help those other branches of the entertainment world which have been so badly hit by TV? "There is no reason whatever," Sir Tom said, "why some of the money should not be allocated to film production and to save some of our art and culture—for example, the living theatre." I can hear exhibitors adding, "And what about us?"

Otherwise, the ACTT general meeting was very much a routine affair and provided no real fireworks. The previous day's announcement that the Rank group was to sponsor bowling alleys provided many speakers with a source for gags.

Over the years, various people—one was Kenneth McEldowney who produced "The River"—have tried to interest British sponsors. The problems they found were the fear that the British would not forsake their traditional games and the enormous costs of large central sites where the passing trade could be attracted. Rank is to convert cinemas and is to inaugurate the game in outer London at the Ambassador, Hayes, and the Regal, Golders Green, once an ice rink, which has been closed for more than a year.

ONE OF THE LARGEST attendances ever at a Variety Club lunch saw the seventh annual Show Business Awards presented. With TV, radio, and newsreels giving full coverage, Mike Frankovich acted as master of ceremonies. Max Bygraves was named show business personality of 1958; Michael Redgrave, best actor; Richard Attenborough, film actor; Sylvia Syms, film actress; and Bernard Bresslaw, most promising newcomer. Presentations were made by Beatrice Lillie, Harold Fielding, Carl Foreman, Bob Monkhouse, and Brian Rix. Bernie has had a fantastic rise and is proof of what TV can do in little over a year. After training and general acting experience, he appeared as a "goof" in the "Army Game" TV show. His "I Only Arsked" became a catch phrase and the title of a Jim Carreras picture. This was as successful as the artist. Now he is to make another for the same producer—"Mad Passionate Love." . . . While welcoming the TOA suggestion that more British films should be aimed at the American market, the Federation of British Film Makers did so with certain reservations. It recorded that a producer may feel that his own particular interests and abilities do not lie in making films for the American market—though, in fact, this may not prevent his film from achieving some success in America.

O'Donnell Sponsors New WOMPI Award

NEW ORLEANS — Mrs. Gene Barnette, president, Women of The Motion Picture Industry (WOMPI) officially announced last fortnight that an award has been set up by R. J. "Bob" O'Donnell, vice-president and general manager, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Dallas, to be given each year to the WOMPI Club most outstanding in public relations for the motion picture industry.

"The R. J. O'Donnell Award is an industry service award," related Mrs. Barnette, "to be presented to the WOMPI Club accumulating the greatest number of points on industry service projects to the public through the sponsorship of luncheons, screenings, Academy Award promotions, and other beneficial ideas which should develop during the coming years."

Basis for determining the winner of the award and the stipulated percentage in points are:

1—10 per cent based on number of industry service projects held during the year.

2—30 per cent for membership participation based on percentage of membership participating and number of hours of participation.

3—40 per cent for number of persons reached through industry service project.

4—20 per cent for amount of publicity received on industry service projects based on column inches of newspaper space, plus radio and TV coverage and any other media of advertising and publicity.

The 1959 Award is to be based on period starting March 15 through June 30 of this year. Presentation will be made at the convention to be held in Jacksonville, at the Robert Meyer Hotel, Sept. 11-12-13.

Each succeeding year shall be from July 1 through June 30 of following year. In her comments, Mrs. Barnette says, "Mr. O'Donnell is one of WOMPI's biggest boosters, and feels that WOMPI can play a very important role in promoting public relations for our industry. He has supported the Dallas Club (parent club of the association) in all of its endeavors, and is interested in anything done for the betterment of the industry of which we are a part. Because of this, he is giving the award with hope that it will stimulate our other clubs."

Art Theatre Forum Highlights S.F. Festival

NEW YORK—The third annual San Francisco International Film Festival will be held Nov. 11-24 this year at the west coast city, and for the first time will include a forum for foreign film theatre operators which Theatre Owners of America will sponsor, it was announced last week by Irving M. Levin, president of Northern California Theatre Owners Association, and executive director of the Festival.

The forum will run for three days, Nov. 22, 23, and 24, and will be the first opportunity for operators of specialized theatres to hear experts in this field discuss the advertising, exploitation, promotion, and handling of specialized and foreign product, as a distinct and different operation from the running of regular commercial theatres, Levin declared at a special press conference held at headquarters of the Theatre Owners of America.

The Festival, Levin said, is definitely set for the full two-week period, and participation pledged by an ever growing group of countries. This year's exposition, he declared, will far exceed the success of the 1957 and 1958 shows, and should firmly establish the annual San Francisco event as one of the world's major Film Festivals.

The new forum, the first of its kind ever held for operators of foreign, art and specialized theatres, will be conducted under the auspices of the national TOA, with Herbert Rosner and John Parsons, Northern California TOA, and Walter Reade, Jr., New York, past president of TOA and chairman of TOA's Foreign Film Committee, acting as co-chairmen. Sessions will be held in a San Francisco "art" theatre, Levin said.

Delegates to the forum will have morning and afternoon sessions each of the three days at which specialists in the field will lead discussions on various phases of specialized theatre operation. Films will be screened at the sessions, and clinics conducted on suggested handling of this product.

TOA Buys Loew's Stock

NEW YORK—With the divorcement of Loew's, Inc., now completed, Theatre Owners of America announced that it has added stock of the Loew's production and distribution company to its portfolio of film company shares.

George G. Kerasotes, president of TOA, declared that TOA now holds stock in all the major companies.

Sedita; Paramount Theatres district manager Arthur Krolick, and other city and theatre officials.

WHERE, OH WHERE, ARE THE SHOWMEN?

STARTING WELL in advance, and continuing "right down to the wire" on April 6, there seems to be a greatly accelerated exhibitor interest in this year's Academy Awards night. Part of this stems from the well-conceived promotional effort that was put behind it. And still more stems from the public awareness and interest in last year's entertaining effort, that the average theatreman has heard and witnessed first hand.

Accompanying all this there seems to be a certain woodenness or stupidity being demonstrated by distributors.

On Monday, April 6, we hope to have a TV audience of 75,000,000 people enthusing about our successes; and for the week before, and at least the week after, we expect particular movies, certain movie personalities, and the movie art in general, to be the nation's conversation piece. Shouldn't this be a great period to have the nation's theatres loaded with the best feature entertainment we can get our hands on? Well . . . try to book a first-run picture. Some mastermind in distribution has figured out that theatre grosses will be affected that Monday night, so certain first-run features will not be released that whole week.

The same, or some other masterminds, have figured out that an admission dollar "in the hand" on Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, April 4, 5 or 6, doesn't have as many pennies as an "in the bush" admission dollar taken in Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, April 7, 8 or 9. A friend of ours, in a first-run situation commanding a top admission scale, offered regular first-run terms for a double bill composed of two of the five Academy Award nominees. Even the last-runs in his area had played the pictures. His plan was to advertise them as nominees and to gamble that one of the two could win. No dice! Neither distributor would take any dates, until they gambled their "if money" on having an Academy Award Winner, come Tuesday morning. Their odds are only one in five, for an extra 5% in film rental; while the exhibitor offered them double those odds for a top film rental. But they turned him down. How silly can you get?

It certainly seems that the average distributor, who never ran a theatre, and who never has done business directly with the public, has now decided to take the public's money on just certain days of the week and under certain conditions. When the public wants to spend it, or when the theatre wants to take it, seems to have no influence.

This is showmanship?

Where, oh where, are the showmen?

THE GOLDENSON-HYMAN DO-IT-YOURSELF EFFORT

THEATREMEN generally must take their hats off to ABC-PARAMOUNT THEATRES.

Here is the greatest concentrated ownership of theatres in the U.S.A., with 537 of them under the banners of their 16 or 17 subsidiaries. They are truly "big business" by every yardstick of stock ownership, banking connections, directorate, etc. But when an industry condition exists that their management feels needs correction, they are not averse to taking off their coats, spending their own dollars, and digging in with the leadership and ability that will get results.

Typical is the continuing effort for the orderly distribution of quality product that is being expended by president Leonard Goldenson and vice-president Ed Hyman.

At their own expense, they have made continuing periodic inspection tours to Hollywood. They have talked, encouraged, and cajoled producer-distributors into spreading their big pictures over the whole year so that periods of "feast and famine" can be avoided. They have guaranteed reciprocal action by their own 537 theatres that would make this "spreading" profitable. And after each of these periodic major efforts, they have, again at their own expense, hosted a trade paper luncheon at which they could turn over to the entire trade the benefits of the things they had learned, and of the commitments they had received.

To the best of our knowledge, they haven't asked another living soul to "dob in," or to lift any part of "the check" for such efforts. It has been their own "do-it-yourself" project all the way. This is the kind of management that earns good will by constructive effort. And we're pretty certain that all theatremen appreciate it.

GRIN OF THE WEEK

REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES J. MILLS, Democrat of Westmoreland County, has just introduced a bill in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives that would make it unlawful "for theatre owners to sell more tickets for a particular performance than there are seats."

Now there is our nomination for the most useless piece of legislation in the past decade. Most theatremen would be tickled pink to sell three-quarters of a house, and he worries about the comfort of standees. And besides, what theatre doesn't have some empty ones down front and on the side even with a full house? While they are empty, sight-lines or no sight-lines, the owner would be "legal."

I would like very much to have you re-edit and re-publish the FAIR FILM PRICING data referred to in your Feb. 25 issue. SEE FOR YOURSELF!

From MIDDLETOWN, N. Y.

Enclosed is a copy of the editorial in our local newspaper relating to the closing of this State Theatre.

You will note that the editor makes some reference to the old serials with their "Don't miss next week's thrilling episode!" gimmick that pulled the crowds in week after week. We, too, wonder what would have become of our business if we had continued to build habit by making "next week" sound exciting and interesting, instead of placing the blame for bad business on TV.

W. V. LAWDER, Retiring Manager
State Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: The feature editorial, and the pictorial feature, in the Middletown Times Herald and in the Middletown Daily Record respectively, dealt nostalgically with the shuttering of this 38-year-old theatre, and with the retirement of Mr. Lawder after 48 years of theatre management. But the former also speculated on the efforts that old-time showmen expended in attracting patronage, and reminisced on the days when four movie theatres thrived in what is now "a one-theatre city." And reading it, we wonder, too, whether along the way, in our own effort at sophisticated management, we didn't in some way lose the common touch.

From MAHANAY CITY, PA.

Why can't the film companies furnish the correct running times on all prints of all features? So many features that we receive run as much as seven or eight minutes short, and some even run over. When a theatre runs continuously and that happens, the projectionist is in a mess and can't keep the daily schedule. We don't all have footage counters, you know!

VINCENT A. LUTKUS
Projectionist

EDITOR'S NOTE: MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR prides itself on the accuracy of the running times, as published with the original REVIEWS and in the succeeding SERVICESECTIONS for one year after the national release date. But, as a print is used, and wear-and-tear and damage results in inspections and deletions, it is certain to get shorter. Of course, this should seldom amount to seven or eight minutes. Do others have this experience?

From BALTIMORE, MD.

I wish to add my voice to that of Mr. Skalsky (LETTERS, issue of March 4, 1959), and the other gentlemen who have requested that you make available reprints of your famous pink REVIEWS, back through 1936.

In my opinion, your REVIEWS are the most complete and most accurate now available to the industry. Certainly many of your subscribers would find a complete set of pink REVIEWS most helpful in their work.

Best wishes for the continued success of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR as a fine trade magazine.

WILLIAM E. HEWITT, JR., Manager
The Edgewood Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sorry! But enough demand just hasn't manifested itself. And besides, nearly everything pre-1948 is now on TV channels.

From JAMAICA, L.I., N.Y.

I was the manager of SMALLEY'S THEATRE in St. Johnsville, N.Y. in 1948 when MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR was celebrating its 30th Anniversary, and at that time you published a letter from me in which I called it "The bible of theatre business". You can look it up if you like. But I just want you to know that I still believe this.

Your pink REVIEWS and your yellow SERVICESECTION are very helpful in every way. I now receive it under the PRUDENTIAL CIRCUIT subscription list to all of their managers, and as you are now in your 41st year please accept my sincere best wishes for luck in your field of work.

Roach Resigns Post As Scranton Executive

NEW YORK—Hal Roach, Jr., resigned last week as board chairman and a director of Scranton Corporation.

James D. Johnson, president, was named his replacement. The board chose 11 director nominees for election at the annual meeting April 15, six of whom are from the recently formed Stockholders Protective Committee.

Four new directors, three from the SPC, were elected to serve immediately. They are Robert Todd Lang, Robert Rittmaster, William Hammerstein, and Hal Roach, Sr.

The board began an investigation into past transactions between Scranton and its parent, F. L. Jacobs Company, to determine if Scranton has any obligations due it from Jacobs. Receivers for Jacobs have been named by New York and Detroit courts. In Scranton's entertainment division are Hal Roach Studios, Hal Roach Distributing Corporation, and Mutual Broadcasting system.

Attention, Drive-Ins!

A situation of concern to all drive-in operators has come to the attention of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR via reports from the field now that outdoor reopenings are taking place in increasing numbers.

While not a new practice, exhibitors should be on guard. Many instances have been uncovered where autos with just a driver have been found to contain other persons hiding on the floor or in the trunk to beat additional admissions. Since few persons come to a drive-in unaccompanied, the license number of single-admission cars is noted, and an attendant checks the car later. If another person or persons are in the auto when checked, the attendant asks to see the ticket stub.

U.S.S.R. Picks Films

WASHINGTON—The U.S.S.R. picked the final four of 10 American-made films to be shown in that country under the film cultural exchange agreement.

The complete list of films in the exchange program are "Rhapsody," "Man of 1,000 Faces," "The Seventh Voyage Of Sinbad," "Beneath The Twelve-Mile Reef," "Lili," "The Great Caruso," "Oklahoma," "The Old Man and The Sea," "Marty," and "Roman Holiday."

Fox Managers Given Carte Blanche

Complete Local Autonomy Expected To Result In Added Service To Exhibs; Ad Force Increase Seen

NEW YORK—Complete local autonomy throughout the 38 domestic and Canadian branch offices of 20th-Fox was given to the company's exchange managers last week by president Spyros P. Skouras at the final session of the company's sales convention.

The sweeping carte blanche offered to the exchange heads gives them complete authority to handle every aspect of distribution without supervision from the home office. Each man will be "his own boss," Skouras said, to an extent reminiscent of original state's rights days, including direct responsibility for the advertising and publicity campaigns in his area. Within the manager's discretion will be the right to engage an advertising and publicity director who will be responsible only to him for campaigns in the territory. This will result in the largest field advertising and exploitation force in the industry.

Skouras told the men that each one of them was now "on his own" and empowered to make any and all decisions on sales and contracts. The exchange heads hailed the "emancipation of the sales force" as the greatest step forward in the history of the industry, enabling them to give greater service to exhibition.

Skouras also told the men that it would be their decision as to when films would be released locally, and charged them with the responsibility of determining when a picture had been properly sold to the public before making it available to reach the largest possible audience. He foresaw an era of unparalleled "salesmanship and showmanship" under this revolutionary new set-up.

Skouras' implementation and expansion of the policy of autonomy outlined earlier by general sales manager Alex Harrison was greeted enthusiastically by the conventioners.

Vice-president Charles Einfeld encouraged the expanded promotion plans and foresaw a greater surge in national advertising, publicity, and exploitation.

The concluding sessions were addressed by George Skouras, president of Magna Theatres, and his staff, distributors of "South Pacific" in Todd-AO, which 20th-Fox will eventually offer in CinemaScope, and Einfeld, who offered a detailed advertising and publicity survey on the company's forthcoming important attractions.

Local Autonomy Plan Hailed By TOA's Kerasotes

The hope that 20th-Fox' sales forces re-organization to give branch managers greater local autonomy "would be successful and will be adopted by other film companies," was voiced by George G. Kerasotes, president of Theatre Owners of America.

He hailed the announcement of strengthening the authority of branch managers as "a goal TOA and its predecessors, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and American Theatres Association, have long sought.

"We have always felt," Kerasotes said, "that the local branch manager is in the best position to know just what the exhibitor can do and cannot do with pictures. Placing the

Rank U.S. Operation Ends After Three Year Experiment

NEW YORK—Rank Film Distributors of America, Inc., announced last fortnight that it would cease its U.S. operation the end of this week, with Lopert Films, Inc., a United Artists subsidiary, taking over and continuing the distribution of films currently in release as well as others on the schedule.

The terse, formal announcement did not come as a surprise, and attributed the reason to "difficulties existing in the industry that made it impossible to successfully continue the operation."

RFDA went into U.S. operation early in 1957, after Rank was dissatisfied with returns from pictures handled by American distributors, including Universal, Republic, and United Artists.

Embassy, WB Sign Unique "Hercules" Deal

NEW YORK—Consummation of one of the most unique distribution deals ever executed in motion picture annals was jointly announced last week by Joseph E. Levine, president of Embassy Pictures Corp., and Charles Boasberg, vice-president and general sales manager of Warner Brothers, regarding the national distribution of Levine's dramatic spectacle, "Hercules," by Warner Brothers.

Levine said: "This marks a new concept in the manner of marketing and merchandising a motion picture, in that Embassy Pictures Corp. will continue to direct the advertising, publicity, and exploitation of the picture, selling it to the public. Warner Brothers . . . will directly sell the picture to the exhibitors. This creates a combination of teamwork that will make the greatest impact on the public and our industry."

"None of our plans for the marketing and the exploitation of the picture have changed, including the use of 600 color prints and day-and-date saturation bookings. We are going ahead full steam with the tremendous campaign that we have previously announced, encompassing national magazines, TV, radio and daily newspapers. Sid Blumenstock and Bill Doll will continue to head up the advertising, publicity and exploitation for "Hercules," combined with the Warner Brothers forces in New York and Hollywood."

The campaign was outlined in detail at a huge industry luncheon given by Levine which attracted more than a thousand persons to the Hotel Waldorf Astoria. E. H. Rowley, executive vice-president, United Artists Theatres, a dais guest, remarked, "I have never seen a campaign such as this to sell the exhibitors."

branch manager in a position where he can meet these problems with the necessary autonomy of action could be a tremendous step forward in distributor-exhibitor relations."

Kerasotes said the change would be watched with interest by TOA, and that TOA would urge its members to cooperate with Fox. "We sincerely hope," he said, "that the change will be successful from Fox' point of view, and that the other film companies will follow Fox' lead."

Hammer Films Signs 25 Pix Pact With Col.

By MEL KONECOFF

NEW YORK—James Carreras and associate Tony Hinds arrived in town last week (son Michael, another associate, had to remain home with a sudden virus attack) with news of a new deal, one calculated to help exhibitors with their picture shortages. On hand as a welcoming committee of one was Nate Golden, head of the film division, Department of Commerce.

Carreras also brought along four completed films: two for United Artists, "Ten Seconds To Hell" and "The Hound of the Baskervilles," in Technicolor; one for Paramount, "The Man Who Could Cheat Death," also in Technicolor; and one for U-I. There's also one on the way over for Columbia, "Yesterday's Enemy."

Carreras and Hinds also announced they were to sign a long-term co-production deal with Columbia calling for 25 features at the rate of five per year. They will also be permitted to make two outside pictures annually.

Golden opined that this deal could be the forerunner of other similar pacts. He lauded the two-way trade which the Department of Commerce is so anxious to develop. He applauded Carreras for bringing in many films that are successful at the boxoffice, which showed that they knew what the public wanted. His department stood ready to encourage foreign production which he hoped might fill the void for American exhibitors, and they needn't be all British.

Carreras said that his firm was quite impressed with the way American companies sell their pictures, making a new market available to British producers.

Columbia bought 49 per cent of the stock of Bray Studios, which is owned by Carreras and associates, as part of the overall deal. He and his people have carte blanche as to what to make, and they will finance 50 per cent of all pictures. He reported that Columbia was attracted by the reasonableness of their budgets, which permit large profits on a world-wide basis. Budgets are kept down by low overhead and low producer salaries. The average budget of a film made in England (not by Hammer) is between $600,000 and $750,000. Incidentally, only one of the next five can be classified as a horror film.

Carreras and associates will make "The Mummy" for U-I in 1959 and "Phantom of the Opera" in 1960. He was certain that as a result of the Columbia deal, other British producers—"the live ones"—will benefit and find other sources of production money as well as distributors. He expressed regret at Rank having to go out of business in America.

In England, British pictures are the top grossers (they took all 12 top grossing positions last year) and he thought the future looked rosy. More pictures are being made there than in the U.S. He estimated 1959 will see 125—including those produced by American producers—as compared to the 80 or 90 that were turned out last year. Of course, government aid helps, he admitted.

Whatever theatres closed down in England did so because of age or obsolescence. The majority are doing well, and over 4,000 still remain. About 200 or 300 closed down over the past several years.

Las Vegas Pulling Out All Stops To Welcome Variety Club Delegates

Interested figures check progress on construction of the $30,000 addition to Variety Club's Day Home in Las Vegas, where the new facility is being readied for viewing by delegates to the show business group's international convention beginning on March 31. Seen, left to right, are John DeLuca, project chairman; Ernest Cragin, convention chairman; Sister Charles, principal; and a few students.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—All the stops are being pulled to make the 32nd annual convention of Variety International in Las Vegas March 31 to April 3 the gayest and gaudiest affair in the organization's history.

During their stay in the famed resort, the "Fun and Entertainment Capital of the World," Variety delegates will be exposed to everything Las Vegas has to offer—from a gigantic western street barbecue to the distinction of holding the premiere meeting in Las Vegas' brand new $5 million Convention Center.

All of the downtown clubs and casinos on fabulous Fremont Street will rope off the "busiest street in the west" the first night of the convention to give delegates a taste of the Old West in a gigantic outdoor barbecue and street dance. Western clothing will be order of the night as all the clubs open their doors to Variety.

The following two nights, the 1,500 Variety delegates from all corners of the world will be guests of Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola for their choice of lavish floor shows and dinners at the 10 resort hotels on the famed "Las Vegas Strip." Among the entertainers appearing during the conclave will be Gisele MacKenzie, George Gobel and Georgia Gibbs, Mae West and Company, Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis, Jr., the Lido de Paris production, the Four Lads, Spike Jones, Gordon MacRae, the "Nuit de Paris" and "La Nouvelle Eve" Parisian productions, and many others.

Friday evening the delegates will gather for the first official function to be held in Las Vegas' futuristic new Convention Center. Over 300 persons will participate in a musical "spectacular" under the direction of Antonio Morelli.

There will be five stages used under the massive main dome of the Convention Center for the performance, and many of the foreign countries represented at the conclave—including England, Ireland, Canada, and Mexico—will be honored by special music.

The 1,500 delegates will attend the Heart Award Dinner in the Convention Center Friday for the largest and most lavish banquet ever held in the history of Las Vegas.

Still many, many more events are planned for the entertainment and diversion of Variety members, according to Ernie Cragin, general chairman of the Convention. The Ladies' Auxiliary has been making elaborate plans for a gala Bingo party for wives, featuring $1,000 cash and many other surprise awards. A spectacular fashion show will feature over half a million dollars in furs, jewelry, and the latest feminine fashions.

In effect, the entire Las Vegas resort and entertainment industry is "turning itself inside out" to make the 32nd annual convention a memorable one. From the moment they arrive to the last frantic spin of the Las Vegas merry-go-round Variety delegates are assured the "times of their lives."

Baltimore Tops All Tents In Variety Week Campaign

The efforts of the Baltimore tent in publicizing Variety International Week and its humanitarian achievements were judged best among the 46 tents of the showman's organization, according to international chief barker George Eby.

The campaign of the Memphis unit was voted second best, with Dublin, Ireland; Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Washington, D.C., and Detroit following in that order.

Members of the winning tent have voted the coveted first prize, a round trip to Variety's annual convention in Las Vegas, to Aaron Seidler, New Albert Theatre, Baltimore. Seidler, a former chief barker of the Baltimore tent, served as press guy and coordinator of the Variety Week campaign.

Reade Names Two

OAKHURST, N.J.—Two new appointments were announced last week by Walter Reade, Jr., president of Walter Reade Theatres, to fill a newly created post and a replacement position within the theatre circuit operation.

Paul Baise, veteran of almost 11 years with the Reade organization, has been promoted to the new post of director of specialized theatre operations. Baise has been in charge of the company's advertising and publicity for the past several years. Included in Baise's new duties will be the handling of the company's art cinema engagements and other specialized attractions being planned by the company.

Joining the Reade organization to assume the advertising and publicity duties is Charles T. Felleman. Felleman comes to the company with over 15 years of experience with the exploitation department of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Key convention planners check progress. Seated are Averill Dalitz, Auxiliary chairwoman, and Gen Atol, co-chairwoman; standing are H.G.O. Weiller, co-chairman, and Fred Soly, transportation chairman.

Jack Schieff, left, decorating committee co-chairman, and Charles Howell, downtown clubs chairman, map plans for the Western Downtown Day, an informal highlight in the Las Vegas convention, set to run four days.

Dave Eisenberg, one of the driving forces behind the international convention, pauses momentarily in his task of mapping plans for the March 31 to April 3 meet. Delegates from all over the world will converge on Las Vegas.

"Not only is Marilyn back, but she has with her two co-stars who have ardent followers of their own in Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon. Miss Monroe looks terrific . . . Curtis and Lemmon go at their roles with relish and abandon. Word got around New York that this was the film being 'sneaked' and the paying customers started forming long lines early. Once inside, the lucky ones shook the rafters of the theatre with their howls of glee over this new comedy from Billy Wilder." — M. P. DAILY

"A winner with a zing! Hilarious . . . great entertainment! Probably the funniest picture of recent memory. Starts off like a firecracker and keeps on throwing off lively sparks till the very end. The film should provide United Artists with one of its top grossers for the year!" — VARIETY

"Could any showman ask for more? Bright comedy that sparkles like vintage wine! At a recent 'sneak' this Jazz-Age farce was greeted with an audience enthusiasm that was clamorous, to put it mildly." — FILM DAILY

"'Some Like It Hot' is certain to be even hotter at the boxoffice! Supersonic, breakneck, belly-laugh comedy which should be a block-busting bonanza! Billy Wilder was on the front burner all the way!" — HOLLYWOOD REPORTER

What Do Teens Want? Cleveland To Find Out

CLEVELAND—A plan aimed to increase the interest of the younger generation in motion pictures and to find out what types of films the new generation wants to see was being worked out here last fortnight by Adrian Awan, 20th-Fox publicity representative, and the Motion Picture Council of Greater Cleveland.

The plan, approved in principle by the Cleveland Board of Education, calls for the appointment of two review chairmen by each high school, who would attend screenings of selected pictures and participate in a discussion of the films, moderated by a member of the Motion Picture Council.

These discussions would be taped and the tapes turned over to the studios concerned. Review chairmen would review pictures shown for their school papers, with the best review of each school term granted a merit plaque.

Pictures viewed by the students will represent the output of all studios and will be selected by a three-member committee representing distribution, the Motion Picture Council, and education.

The project is looked upon as a practical grass roots teenage survey.

Cardinal Sponsors Premiere

NEW YORK—For the first time since he gave his enthusiastic support to the late Cecil B. DeMille's Biblical epic, "The Ten Commandments," Richard Cardinal Cushing has agreed to sponsor the showing of a feature film. The picture is "Embezzled Heaven," color-filmed in Vienna and Rome and based upon the novel by Franz Werfel. It features a climactic scene at a Vatican audience conducted by the late Pope Pius XII.

Cardinal Cushing will sponsor the film's American premiere, scheduled for Boston's 700-seat Kenmore on March 30.

Proceeds from the opening night will benefit the Cardinal's April 20-27 pilgrimage to Lourdes with some 70 mentally and physically retarded children.

'58 Recession Reduces Decca Net; U-I In Black Thanks To Studio Sale

NEW YORK—Decca Records, Inc., and subsidiaries for 1958 had net income of $2,776,382, which includes income attributable to the undistributed earnings of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Milton R. Rackmil, president, reported to stockholders last week in the company's annual report. This was equal to $1.82 per share on the 1,527,401 shares of capital stock outstanding at the end of the year. For 1957, Decca reported net income of $3,972,514 or $2.48 per share on 1,602,501 shares then outstanding.

Rackmil said that although Universal reported a loss for its fiscal year ended Nov. 1, 1958, its operations for the calendar year 1958 resulted in a net profit due to the sale of its studio properties for $11,250,000. Universal realized a net gain after taxes of $3,676,510 from this transaction. At the same time, Rackmil said, Universal arranged for the lease-back of studio facilities adequate for its production requirements.

Rackmil said the general business recession in 1958 adversely affected sales of the record division, resulting in lower earnings than in the peak year of 1957.

Admission Prices Seen Key To U.S. Film Earnings In Far East Nations

Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association of America, recently arrived in Honolulu while en route to the Far East where he will negotiate U.S. film rights with Japan, Formosa, Thailand, Singapore, and the Malay States.

NEW YORK—Eric Johnston, MPAA-MPEA president, just back from a five-week trip in the Far East, stated last fortnight that America's motion picture industry should construct new theatres, in partnership with local nationals, there.

Outside of Japan, the Philippines, and Hong Kong, Johnston said, "theatres are needed." Lack of them in the Far East is "our limiting factor," he asserted.

The main problem in the Far East "is low admission prices," he said. For example, Johnston said, the top in Indonesia is about five cents, of which one-third goes to the government, the rest to theatres and distribution.

Censorship is also a "major" problem in Indonesia, he said. "We can't get our quota of 150 features past the censor." Indonesia has rejected 65 American pictures so far in the fiscal year, Johnston said.

As to the local status of the film industry in the Far East, Johnston reported that Japan and Hong Kong are "doing very well." He said he believed the American movie industry would get "favorable treatment in the fiscal year beginning this April 1." He added that the American film industry is "earning $12-$13 million a year" in Japan. There is a "year of grace" before the new regulation that distribution companies operate their own distribution firms there goes into effect in May, 1960.

"American pictures are very popular in the Far East," he concluded. "If we can only get reasonable admission prices, earnings will grow materially."

AA Signs Spanish Deal

NEW YORK—Allied Artists International Corp. has concluded a long term agreement for the distribution of Allied Artists product in Spain by Radio Films, S.A.E. of Barcelona, Norton V. Ritchey, president of AA International, announced last week.

200 At Concession Meeting

NEW YORK—The 1959 Eastern Regional Conference sponsored by the National Association of Concessionaires, first to be held here in four years, was attended by over 200 industryites last week at the Park Sheraton Hotel.

The conference inaugurated a new meeting technique based on "discussion by topic." Topics included on the agenda were vending and merchandising higher price items, new ideas in merchandising, conventional theatres, drive-ins, road-shows, novelties, and concession diversification.

Taylor Heads Para. Division

NEW YORK—Alfred R. Taylor has been put in charge of Paramount's midwestern division, replacing J. H. Stevens, division manager, who has taken an extended leave of absence, Sidney G. Deneau, vice-president of Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, announced. Taylor has been Paramount's Los Angeles branch manager.

The midwestern division, with headquarters in Chicago, encompasses Paramount's Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, and Minneapolis branches.

Universal adopted new production and distribution policies, Rackmil explained, because of a drop in public interest in the type of "inexpensively produced pictures which had been Universal's mainstays." Under the new policies, Universal will produce more elaborate films based on well known literary or dramatic properties with star-studded casts.

Coincident with the development of the new policies Universal suspended production for a time in 1958, but meanwhile the company maintained a steady flow of pictures to exhibitors from a backlog of previously completed but unreleased feature films. "By July, 1958," Rackmil said, "the plans for the changed program had crystallized and the studio was in a position to go forward."

He added: "These new policies also take advantage of the trend toward film production by independent companies formed by producers, directors, actors and other creative people who share in any profits from the pictures they work on. Consequently, Universal has made arrangements with several independent companies for the joint production of a number of outstanding features."

Exhibs Boost TV . . . for a day

By AL ERLICK

THEATREMEN across the land, Canadian neighbors to the north, and other citizenry wherever civilization has spread enough to warrant placement of a National Broadcasting Company affiliate, are declaring a one-day truce with the television industry in the never-ending battle for the leisure hours of the public.

ARKANSAS

CALIFORNIA

Perhaps truce is the wrong word. What has been affected is more in the nature of an alliance, with exhibitors in the strange position of trying to convince their customers that the thing to do on the night of April 6 is stay home and watch television. Like most seeming gestures of purest altruism, there's a slightly selfish motive lurking in the shadows of NBC's April 6 programming plans. On that particular Monday evening, for one hour and 45 minutes of celebrity-studded magic, television belongs to the motion picture industry. An incomparable host of famous faces and equally famous figures will parade across the postage stamp screen to do homage to the best in their profession. Yes, on April 6, "Oscar" comes to TV.

The small statuette, reverently housed on mantelpieces in some of the world's most famous homes, packs a mighty wallop. Just who walks away smiling from Hollywood's most glittering night out affords conversational tidbits for an entire population for weeks before and after the big event. Even more important, the industry reminds the lethargic, with whom they might have lost touch during the year, that there is no medium of entertainment that can match the variety afforded by motion picture theatres. Small wonder that exhibitors, as well as representatives of other industry groups, consider the loss of a night's business money well spent.

Last year for the first time, motion pictures sponsored the event itself, and the resultant commercial-free TV spectacular attracted a viewing audience of staggering proportions—75,000,000 strong. That's a lot of zeroes in any case, but the end is not yet in sight. Increased effort on the part of the nation's theatremen is almost certain to bring about an appreciable rise this year.

In every state, designated chairmen, many of them pictured on these pages, have been busy for weeks enlisting area support for the telecast. Aided by field exploitation representatives, they have flooded newspapers, radio and TV stations, and other communications media with news and features designed to pique public interest. Realizing that the glamour capital of the world, Hollywood, can capture the public imagination like few other places or events, newspapers have started contests based on picking the "Oscar" winners, and radio stations have been featuring contending songs. the campaign can be seen in the form of banners, car cards, trailers, radio and TV spots, etc.

Out in Hollywood, the best entertainment minds in the world, under the direction of Jerry Wald, are busy putting together the big show. Approximately 100 of the biggest stars in the world will take part, singing, dancing, wise-cracking, or just ripping open an envelope to the accompaniment of a deep hush. Quite a show, and the industry plans to make the most of it.

More and more, motion pictures are becoming an international medium. As the world grows smaller, the screen grows larger, and cooperative film-making results in international film stars and international hits.

more important. No other single event focuses public attention more strongly or more directly on our industry. For 105 minutes, the world of entertainment belongs exclusively to the movies. Every exhibitor, from the largest first-run situation to the smallest neighborhood house, must benefit.

The success of April 6 will depend on the cooperative efforts of a united industry. Throughout the area that will be reached by NBC's cameras, men are working tirelessly to guarantee this success. Exhibitors have become TV's greatest boosters—for a day.

Pope Urges Watchful Eye On Mass Media

VATICAN CITY—Pope John XXIII last fortnight directed bishops the world over to tighten up Catholic action in the fields of motion pictures, radio and television.

The Pontiff said those media represent grave problems in the "fields of public morality, propagation of ideas, and the education of youth." Therefore, he extended his "paternal and insistent warning" to those responsible for the media.

SWG Honors Its Best

HOLLYWOOD—The Screen Writers Guild made its annual awards last fortnight at a banquet and floor show at the Moulin Rouge Theatre Restaurant.

The Guild's Laurel Award, presented annually to the writer who "over the years has contributed most to the literature of the screen," went to Nunnally Johnson.

The award for the best written American comedy went to S. N. Behrman and George Froeschel for "Me and The Colonel"; best written American drama award went to Nathan E. Douglas and Harold Jacob Smith for "The Defiant Ones"; and the award for the best written American musical went to "Gigi."

DiSalle Against Ticket Tax

COLUMBUS, OHIO—Governor Michael DiSalle stated last fortnight that admission taxes were among the items in the sales tax bill introduced in Ohio Senate by Senator Stephen R. Olenick, Democrat, that he will work to delete.

The Governor said that admission taxes and various other items in the Olenick bill "definitely were not in my budget recommendations."

NEW YORK—Morton A. The three conferences, the most extensive in the history of the company, will bring together top personnel from MGM's 40 overseas branches with home office executives. While primary attention will be given to the extraordinary plans for "Ben-Hur," ample time will also be devoted to the marketing and sales policies for the other major MGM productions that will be released in 1959.

The conferences will kick off in Madrid on April 14 and continue through April 18. The Tokyo segment will follow from April 21 to April 25. Then will come the third conference in Mexico City from April 26 to April 30.

Ohio Censor Advocates, Industry Spokesmen Clash Over New Curbs

COLUMBUS, OHIO—Present Ohio statutes providing penalties for showing "obscene" films constitute the American way of dealing with "objectionable" films, members of the Ohio Senate Judiciary Committee hearing censorship bills were told in the final hearing on SB 115 and 242.

Industry spokesmen were among 13 opponents heard.

The bills were referred to a three-man subcommittee with Senator Thomas O'Shaughnessy, Columbus Democrat, co-sponsor of SB 242, as chairman. Other members are Senator Danny Johnson, New Philadelphia Democrat, and Senator Fred Hoffman, Cincinnati Republican. Opponents asserted the bills are of questionable constitutionality, would deny freedom of press and speech, are discriminatory, would cause unfair tax burdens, and would have little or no effect in curbing juvenile delinquency.

Industryites denied a heated charge by Senator O'Shaughnessy that "the film industry wants no restraint of any kind and wants to show any and all kinds of pictures." It was pointed out that virtually all producers are governed by the Production Code.

SB 115, introduced by Senator Robert Shaw, Columbus Republican, is aimed at "obscene" films.

SB 242, sponsored by O'Shaughnessy and Paul Lynch, Columbus Democrat, would classify films "adult" and "family" and would censor "misleading" advertising.

Industry spokesmen included Frank Murphy, Loew's division manager; Joe Alexander, RKO division manager; John Harlor and Harry Wright, MPA attorneys; Ed McGlone, RKO Columbus city manager; Louis Sher, president, Art Theatre Guild. Other opponents included Professor Frederick Wirt, Denison University; Morton Iove, Civil Liberties Union; spokesmen for American Veterans' Committee; Mrs. Herbert Kirschbaum, representing 15 Ohio State University professors; and Rev. Bryant W. Dennison, Ohio Diocese, Protestant Episcopal Church.

Levy New AA Ad Manager

NEW YORK—Sanford Abrahams, Allied Artists director of advertising and publicity, announced the appointment of Herman Levy as advertising manager, a post Abrahams formerly held, effective on April 1.

Levy, now head of the Universal-International advertising department at the studio, terminates a 14 year association with Universal to step into his new position.

"Naked Maja" Mailable? Congress Gets Into Act

WASHINGTON—The United Artists-U.S. Post Office argument over the mailable of advertising on "The Naked Maja" reached the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives last fortnight.

Representative Kathryn E. Granahan, Pennsylvania Democrat, who is chairman of a Post Office Subcommittee, announced her group would inquire whether the Post Office Department has sufficient power to "differentiate between art and box office lures" in determining what is mailable.

No Reduction Seen For N.Y. Censor Fees

ALBANY—The Assembly Committee on Public Education voted not to report a bill by Anthony P. Savarese, Jr., Queens Republican, which substantially reduced the license fees charged via the Motion Picture Division, State Education Department.

The measure, similar to ones reported by the same committee in 1955, 1956, and 1957, and approved by the Legislature the latter two years—but vetoed by Averell Harriman, then governor—provided an increase in the rate for reviewing original films from $3 to $4 per thousand feet. However, it decreased the scale for prints from $2 per thousand feet, to $4 for each additional "entire copy."

It is the print tap that produces what distributors claim to be a heavy profit for the state each year. Harriman, in disapproving the 1956 proposal, estimated the loss in revenue at $270,000. The next year, in nixing the bill, he placed the loss at $300,000. Both times, Harriman pointed out the Legislature had not voted substitute revenue.

To meet the objection that the measure would "throw the budget out of balance," it was amended, at the last minute this year, to make the effective date April 1, 1960, instead of July 1, 1959. This had the change coincide with the start of a new fiscal year.

Commerce and Industry Association of New York, which entered the fray on behalf of the proposal, thought data furnished the new budget director, Dr. T. Norman Hurd, and his staff, in letters and conferences, had convinced the budget division that justice dictated a reduction of censorship fees.

Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller, in his recent budget message, estimated revenue from this source, during fiscal year 1958-59, at $400,000—a decline of $57,000 from the previous 12 months.

Industry Wins "Reprieve" As Censor Measures Die

ALBANY—As Republican leaders pushed for adjournment of the Legislature by March 25, if possible, an informed source declared that Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Materials' bills dealing with classifications (in a modified fashion) and establishing tighter control over advertising were "dead for this session."

He warned that the motion picture industry had, in effect, been given a "reprieve and should recognize this, by correcting abuses

COMPO Anti-Censor Ad Hit In Ohio Paper

COLUMBUS, O.—The Columbus Dispatch took sharp issue with a current COMPO ad on growing demands for censorship printed in Editor and Publisher, in an editorial titled, "Cry For Censorship Rises."

The COMPO ad states that we are living in "one of those occasional darkening periods when the voice of the censor is heard in the land." The ad warns the press that "the censor's cry is always fatal to freedom" and equates the present agitation to censor movies with conditions that evoked John Milton's "Areopagica" and Peter Zenger's campaign for freedom of speech and the press.

"We quite agree that sentiment to censor movies is evident, strong and growing," said the Dispatch. "We do not agree that it properly may be equated with a desire to see basic freedoms curbed, or that it represents a threat to the free dissemination of legitimate information in any media."

"The plain fact is that the multiplying calls for censorship stem from the almost complete breakdown of the standards of ordinary decency that followed in the wake of the 'liberal' Supreme Court's repeated knockout blows of state film review laws."

"It is the voice of a substantial segment of public opinion that will not be silenced. The American film industry's own once-effective self-regulatory program is in collapse. Foreign-made 'adult only' pictures so raw that they shock many decent-minded people of all ages are shown openly and advertised (in some cities) with a notorious lack of taste."

"So long as motion pictures which are offensive to millions of people, and which are entirely unsuitable to children and young people are produced and exhibited, so long will public clamor continue for reasonable and moderate curbs on the offenders."

"Much of this clamor comes from people who are just as firmly opposed to censorship, in principle, as is this newspaper. The way to end it is not to piously invoke the shades of Milton and Zenger as a pretext for continuing the present excesses—and perhaps excusing even worse ones—but to return to the standards of responsibility and self-restraint that once were mandatory under the industry's own code, and under the provisions for review of films provided in various states where these protective laws have been held unconstitutional."

"If this is not done, efforts are certain to continue to find a formula providing for state review of films that the Supreme Court will be forced to accept. In the words of a great American statesman of the last century, the movie-going public is confronted with a condition, not a theory. And the public will not permanently accept fine-spun legal theorizing from the high bench so long as the condition with which it deals becomes continually worse."

Attention has been focused in recent months on an outbreak of censorship activity all over the country causing concern to all factions of the industry.

in film content and advertising.

A resolution for continuation of Joint Legislative Committee's existence, introduced by chairman Joseph R. Younglove, Johnstown Republican, stated that "widespread public concern has been evidenced relative to the type of material being disseminated in this state by mass media of communication, including picture magazine, comic books, radio, television, and motion pictures."

Wilmington Struggles With License Fee Law

WILMINGTON, DEL.—After withdrawing a proposed ordinance making 18 changes in the business license fee law, City Council heard first and second readings of a new proposal making 22 amendments. The new proposal retains the original 18 changes with some minor revisions in wording.

Added was a provision that members of the board of directors of any firm will not be considered as employees when calculating the $1 per month fee (for every employee above one working 10 days or more in a month) except those directors subject to the provisions of the Social Security and/or federal or state unemployment insurance laws.

On March 5, by 11-1 vote, Council overrode the Mayor's veto of the ordinance setting a base fee of $300 per year for motion picture theatres and assessing location operators $5 per year on each machine vending food, soft drinks, or "merchandise of any character."

Edward R. Hensel, director of the new License Fee Collection Bureau, in his first interview since assuming that post, said, "I'm going to work to see if we can't get the $1 per employee fee eliminated as it regards the first quarter of this year. It wouldn't be equitable," he said, "to charge that fee for the first quarter."

The pictures wanted by the public are doing better than ever. The increase in admission prices overcame a five per cent attendance drop, and tax remissions by the government also boosted final figures. He expected the government to grant even further relief via tax reductions or eliminations.

He admitted that they can't turn out blockbusters over there because the small, immediate market is a gamble. The top return possible in England and surroundings comes to $1,500,000.

Contrary to the opinions of some, he didn't think that the horror cycle was dying out. The good ones will still make money in his opinion.

Their arrival was celebrated by a cocktail party attended by distribution as well as exhibitor toppers here.

NEW YORK — Paramount's Memphis branch is being streamlined and will be merged into the New Orleans branch, it was announced here last week by Hugh Owen, vice-president of Paramount Film Distributing Corporation.

Anti-Pay TV Group Seek AT&T Support

NEW YORK—Philip F. Harling, co-chairman of the industry's Joint Committee on Toll TV, announced last fortnight that the aid of American Telephone and Telegraph Company will be sought in the effort to block subscription television.

Robert Taplinger and Associates, public relations firm, has been retained by the group to lay out a campaign and put it into action.

Harling said, "We will point out to AT&T that the very people it is now serving would be the very ones to be deprived of free television should pay TV be put into effect. We also will point out that it would work a hardship on their customers by increasing their telephone bills."

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecoff

PRODUCER-DIRECTOR George Stevens was in town last week to take part in the promotion for "The Diary of Anne Frank," and when we saw him in his hotel suite the other day, he related that he's spent close to two years working on the project. He takes his time in making a film, operating on the theory that the longer it takes to make a film, the longer will it run in theatres. Thus, if it takes a year to make a picture it should be around for at least this period of time.

He thought the public would go for the idea of reserved seats for the film because they can look forward to seeing it when they want to see it. Reserving seats makes sense as far as the customers are concerned, in his opinion. He believed that distributor 20th-Fox has hard ticket plans for it all over the country. Experience has proven that even the subsequent runs benefit from the reserved seat situation.

The picture now runs two hours and 50 minutes, which he thought was a satisfactory enough length to give the customers their money's worth, as well as enough of an experience to be satisfying. A big picture is a film that pleases its immediate audience and then attracts others. It does not mean a lengthy film. It is also more difficult to make a long picture than a short one.

Stevens believed that Charles Einfeld and his staff are doing a good job in selling and promoting the picture. Good selling enhances the film, and he didn't think that it would have gotten the reception it did were it not for the "enlightened" campaign by Einfeld. Production and promotion, he believed, go hand in hand.

He and his son, George, Jr., who works with him, try to interest people at the outset of production, especially those in the advertising and publicity departments.

The production cost came to $1,300,000, plus some fancy studio bookkeeping which may raise the cost, but he's only concerned with the actual monies required to put a story on film. He felt the promotion and advertising costs will be considerable, even though Einfeld is a very capable guy being able to get the most space for the least amount of money, something of which he approves.

Stevens felt in the case of "Frank" that it would have been unsatisfactory to just transfer the play to the screen, which has a great deal more latitude to offer. He also felt that the needs of the screen were different, and a different cast was also in order, as in the case of Millie Perkins instead of Susan Strassberg, who appeared in the play.

Incidentally, as president of the Academy of Arts and Sciences, he hoped that this year's show would be even better than last year's and that it wouldn't turn out to be just another TV spectacular. He felt it was important to show the awards on TV to give it the widest possible presentation, audience, and good stature. He felt it was a good way to sell the industry and brushed off the complaint made by a few that it was wrong to urge potential theatre customers to stay at home to see the show. He felt that it would benefit the industry the rest of the year.

His next project will be "The Greatest Story Ever Told," and he will make, together with his son, "King of California" later in the year. Fox will release the former while the latter has not as yet been set.

I HAVE RETURNED: Frank Capra is back and UA has him. Out of the feature-making business since 1951 at which time he turned to making science subjects for TV and the Bell Telephone System, Capra recently finished "Hole in the Head," which some say is a rip-roaring comedy starring Frank Sinatra. It's also his first in CinemaScope, which contrary to popular belief can be used for comedy if "Hole" is any proof.

With Sardi's famed and wonderful Martin Balmer in attendance at lunch, Capra related how he liked to attend previews and record reaction on a tape together with the sound track which makes removing or repairing those areas that need same comparatively easy. He also believed preview cards can prove an accurate barometer how a film will fare.

He believed audiences are ready, willing and able to laugh at comedies. It's just that successful ones are difficult to make and hard to finance. They also haven't been made in great numbers because the industry was unhappy, and unhappy people don't make comedies.

Regarding censorship, he thinks we should object to it vehemently, including classification as to adult or general. He thought the Production Code was well enough known.

As for the future, he has nothing concrete in mind, and he's waiting for reaction on "Hole" to see whether he'll venture out on the road to do some selling on it.

ROLL THE CAMERAS, BEGORRA: George Glass and Walter Seltzer, executive producers with Pennebaker Productions, who just completed turning out "Shake Hands With The Devil" in Ireland, returned here last week with the news that their film was the first to be made in the newly-constructed studios in Ireland. Its proximity to England permitted a number of well-known players to make brief appearances before the cameras, which will help in the selling.

Sixty-six days were spent in the shooting of the James Cagney vehicle, and the key technicians had to come from London since Irish technicians still needing training. The production cost came to $1,700,000, and if it had been made in Hollywood, it would have been 50 per cent more expensive.

They related how the cities of San Francisco, Chicago, and Boston having large segments of the population of Irish descent were bombarded with information on the film from Ireland as part of a long-sell operation.

Right now, Pennebaker is waiting for Marlon Brando to complete "One Eyed Jacks" for Paramount release, while the next for UA release will be "Paris Blues." They would like to make one with Brando and two without him every three years. They want to get out and really sell each production to the best of their ability, a vital factor these days.

BOSTON

The current film at Spero Latchis' Latchis, Brattleboro, Vt., was "Nice Little Bank That Should Be You-Know-What," and next door, the local bank was You-Know-Whatted. As a result, Latchis is taking a ribbing as the robbery occurred the day following the opening of the film. The local papers picked up the item and splashed it on the front page with a cartoon of the culprit studying the marquee on the Latchis, all of which helped business at the theatre. . . . The Cinema, Portland, Maine, has been sold to a local bank to be dismantled. Owned and operated by the Ralph Snider Circuit, the theatre was closed recently. . . . MARCH 25, 1959

COLUMBIA

Gidget

COMEDY
95M

Columbia
(CinemaScope)
(Eastman Color)

ESTIMATE: Entertaining, fun-filled entry.

CAST: Sandra Dee, James Darren, Cliff Robertson, Arthur O'Connell, the Four Preps, Mary LaRoche, Joby Baker, Tom Laughlin, Sue George, Robert Ellis, Jo Morrow, Yvonne Craig, Patti Kane, Doug McClure. Produced by Lewis J. Rachmil; directed by Paul Wendkos.

STORY: Sixteen-year old Sandra Dee is taken on her first "manhunt" at Malibu Beach by some other more experienced gal friends, although she doesn't feel about boys as the others do. She's just interested in having fun, and she's the one who attracts the boys by accidental near-drowning. James Darren in particular takes her under his wing and introduces her to the other surfboard enthusiasts in the group. This group is led by ex-Air Force pilot Cliff Robertson, who seeks only the life of a beachcomber. They name her Gidget for girl midget, and she is introduced to the joys of surfing. They permit her to become their mascot. It seems that Darren idolizes Robertson and is determined to follow in his footsteps. Dee finds that she cares for Darren, and while he thinks she's cute, he looks for his romancing elsewhere. Dee feels her last chance to nab Darren will be at a big blowout marking the end of the season, and she tries to make him jealous by telling him she is in love with Robertson. Her parents are upset by the whole episode, and Dee is confined to home grounds while father Arthur O'Connell makes a blind date with the son of a friend. It turns out to be Darren, and they are reunited, with him giving her his fraternity pin. They're both pleased to see Robertson going to work and abandoning his do-nothing existence.

The distributor is making a determined effort to back up the film with a host of selling materials including smart promotions and recommendations by the idol of the teeners, Dick Clark, who has made a number of trailers available for TV presentation as well as in theatres, etc. There are also records, tie-in ads, radio commercial records, etc., all part of a merchandising program which Columbia feels is a plus factor when an exhibitor buys the film for his theatre. Much of the campaign is particularly slanted at the teen market even though the film can provide enjoyment for the family.

X-RAY: A "Gidget" is a midget or short girl, and in this case it applies to Sandra Dee, who is a doll. The film is fast-moving, funny, and full of entertaining highlights and sidelights, and it's just loaded with angles of interest for the younger set which makes up much of today's theatre audience. The plot is light in weight and fresh as well as interesting; the cast performs well; and direction and production are good. Audiences should get a kick out of the on-screen proceedings, and it should make up well as an entertaining and pleasing show. The screenplay is by Gabrielle Upton based on a novel by Frederick Kohner. Songs heard include "Gidget," "The Next Best Thing To Love," "Cinderella."

TIP ON BIDDING: Higher program rates or better.

AD LINES: "They Fidget For 'Gidget'"; "Dick Clark Goes For Gidget", "She's The Sweetheart of the Beach Generation."

Juke Box Rhythm

MUSICAL
81M

Columbia

ESTIMATE: Pop music bonanza for the younger set.

CAST: Jo Morrow, Jack Jones, Brian Donlevy, George Jessel, Hans Conried, Karin Booth, Marjorie Reynolds, Frieda Inescort, Edgar Barrier, Fritz Feld, Hortense Petra, Earl Grant Trio, The Nitwits, Johnny Otis, The Treniers. Produced by Sam Katzman; directed by Arthur Dreifuss.

STORY: Princess Jo Morrow arrives in New York with her aunt, Frieda Inescort, to purchase a coronation wardrobe. Attracted by music in the hotel, Morrow wanders into a fraternity dance and meets Jack Jones. To the dismay of her aunt, they are photographed together. Jones' father, Brian Donlevy, is an unsuccessful Broadway producer with an idea for a show called "Juke Box Jamboree." He needs money, but is reluctant to accept it from wealthy Karin Booth, who is in love with him. Jones, meanwhile, hopes he will reconcile with his wife, Marjorie Reynolds. Junk man turned dress designer Hans Conried promises Jones a hefty commission if he lands the princess' coronation account. Jones steers Morrow to him and she likes the dresses. Just as everything is moving smoothly, including the romance between Jones and Morrow, Booth bares Conried's past. Tragedy threatens, but democracy triumphs. Conried backs Donlevy's smash hit; Donlevy and Reynolds reconcile; and Jones is invited to attend the coronation, secure in his love for the princess.

X-RAY: Plenty of pop music here for the younger fans, as top record names strut their stuff. The slight story about a princess in New York serves adequately to introduce a lovely newcomer, Jo Morrow, and other roles are handled satisfactorily also. These musical programmers have done well in the past, and this one sports the same elements. George Jessel, slightly out of place, is dragged in to perform a specialty number as added guest star insurance, but it's strictly for the kids. Screenplay is by Mary C. McCall, Jr., and Earl Baldwin.

TIP ON BIDDING: Program rates.

AD LINES: "It's A Regal Riot . . . As The Princess Takes New York By Storm"; "She's Rockin' In Royal Rhythm To A Juke Box Jamboree."

MGM

Green Mansions (914)

DRAMA
101M

MGM
(CinemaScope)
(Metrocolor)

ESTIMATE: Moderately entertaining.

CAST: Audrey Hepburn, Anthony Perkins, Lee J. Cobb, Sessue Hayakawa, Henry Silva, Nehemiah Persoff, Michael Pate, Estelle Hemsley. Produced by Edmund Grainger; directed by Mel Ferrer.

STORY: Political upheaval and a search for gold brings Venezuelan Anthony Perkins into the interior, where he is befriended by Indians whose village is ruled by Sessue Hayakawa. Their village is surrounded by a forest rich in animal life and other natural foods, but this area is untouched by the Indians because they believe it is ruled by an evil spirit. Perkins is intrigued by the forest and a melodic voice which belongs to Audrey Hepburn. She lives in the wilderness with her grandfather, Lee J. Cobb, and Perkins finds himself in love with her. He seeks to establish her origin, and they journey together to a distant city, accompanied by Cobb. They learn little since the village is in ruins and there are no inhabitants. Cobb returns to the forest and is slain by the Indians. Hepburn follows, evading Perkins, and she is trapped in a tall tree which is set afire. When Perkins arrives after killing off the leader of the invading Indians, he fears Hepburn is dead. He hears her voice off in the distance and goes to join her.

X-RAY: This tale of love in the forest between a beautiful and innocent girl and a lad from the big city who seeks vengeance on those who murdered his father is one that will find the going rough in this time and day unless it's spotted in houses where beauty and quiet drama are appreciated. Today's youngsters may be hard put to find the patience to accept a tale of people finding each other as well as beauty about them. Performances are good, and direction and production are okay, with some of the scenic views really impressive. The screenplay is by Dorothy Kingsley, based on W. H. Hudson's book of the same title.

TIP ON BIDDING: Individual situations will govern this.

AD LINES: "Thrilling Adventure In A Wilderness"; "She Was A Woman of Mystery In A Beautiful Setting."

20th-FOX

The Diary Of Anne Frank

DRAMA
170M

20th-Fox
(CinemaScope)

ESTIMATE: High rating dramatic entry.

CAST: Millie Perkins, Joseph Schildkraut, Shelley Winters, Richard Beymer, Gusti Huber, Lou Jacobi, Diane Baker, Douglas Spencer, Dody Heath, Ed Wynn. Produced and directed by George Stevens.

STORY: In June, 1945, in Amsterdam, Jewish Joseph Schildkraut, in tattered clothes, climbs factory stairs to a hidden third floor, where he and his family and some friends spent considerable time hiding from the Nazis during the occupation. He is greeted by owner Douglas Spencer and his assistant, Dody Heath, who hid them and fed them. Schildkraut reports that he alone has escaped after being arrested and sent to the various concentration camps during the closing weeks of World War II. He finds the diary of his daughter, Millie Perkins, among the ruined remains of the apartment. He remembers how he and the others, including Perkins, his wife Gusti Huber, his older daughter Diane Baker, and their friends Lou Jacobi, his wife Shelley Winters, and their son Dick Beymer, first arrived for their long stay and how rules were laid out as to when they could move, talk, etc. They had to be careful because of the workmen in the factory underneath. There are moments of suspense as they wait out the day of liberation by the Allied Forces, and they even acquire another boarder in the person of Ed Wynn, a dentist, who needs hiding also. Eventually, they begin to get on each other's nerves and fear that their presence was discovered by a burglar who heard them. As time passes and Perkins grows into a lovely lady, she and Beymer fall in love and have dates of a sort. In August of 1944, the dreaded police do arrive, having been tipped by the burglar. The refugees are split among the various concentration camps with only Schildkraut surviving.

X-RAY: This picture of note has much working for it. It came from a successful play as well as from a widely-read novel. Contained herein are drama, suspense, a play on human emotions, romance, domestic bickering, and the stages a young girl goes through as she grows into a lovely young teenager. Interest is always present, intense some times and lagging a bit at other times when the youthful lovers enter into discussions on the temper and circumstance of the times. There are moments when audiences will be deathly silent for fear of giving away the refugees, which is a tribute to the great directorial skill as well as the fine acting that is demonstrated in such generous portions. Everyone is excellent with newcomer Millie Perkins particularly so in the title role. The film is rather long and perhaps the story could have been told a bit more quickly with the same effect, but this is a minor complaint about an otherwise sterling effort. Whether or not the film is worth reserved seats is something that exhibitors must decide with regard to their own situations: whether or not they are a city operation; whether or not the subject matter is of strong enough interest for their audiences, etc. The promotional and advertising aspects of the campaign are big enough to put the film in the major category class, and it makes it easy for the exhibitor to pick up the ball and really go with it. The screenplay is by Frances Goodrich and Albert Hackett, based on their play.

TIP ON BIDDING: Higher rates.

AD LINES: "A Proud Presentation By The Motion Picture Screen"; "A Stage Hit Made Into An Outstanding Motion Picture."

MELODRAMA

20th-Fox

ESTIMATE: Lower half filler

CAST: Pedro Armendariz, Rodolfe Hoyos, Terry Rangno, Christiane Martel, Robert Palmer. Produced by Jack Leewood; directed by Byron Haskin.

STORY: Pirates Pedro Armendariz and Rodolfo Hoyos bury some stolen treasure on an island, after which Hoyos shoots Armendariz and leaves him for dead. The wound proves to be superficial and he recovers. Exploring the island after his ship has gone, he finds the only other inhabitant is a small boy, Terry Rangno. The two become friends through the 10 years that follow, during which time they are unable to sight or attract a rescue ship. They surprise natives from another island bringing attractive daughter of a French trader, Christiane Martel, to an idol for sacrifice, and rescue her. When Hoyos eventually shows up to claim the treasure, he and Armendariz kill each other. Robert Palmer (the grown up Rangno) and Martel use one of the native canoes to head towards civilization.

X-RAY: This entry can serve either as filler on the program or as an entry for the kiddies, what with a counterpart on screen, pirates, tame pets, etc. The cast, direction, and production are fair. The screenplay is by Eric Norden based on the book by Frederick Marryat.

TIP ON BIDDING: Program Rates.

AD LINES: "Pirates Treasure Could Lead To Death"; "Raw Adventure Marks The Life of A Pirate."

The Sad Horse

DRAMA
78M

20th-Fox
(CinemaScope)
(Color by DeLuxe)

ESTIMATE: Good programmer.

CAST: David Ladd, Chill Wills, Rex Reason, Patrice Wymore, Gregg Palmer. Produced by Richard E. Lyons; directed by James B. Clark.

STORY: Ten-year-old David Ladd, limping as a result of a bout with polio, has been raised by his father, Gregg Palmer. The latter decides to get married again which doesn't sit well with the boy, and Palmer decides to bring him to the ranch of his grandfather, Chill Wills to remedy the situation. A small mutt accompanies the lad. The ranch offers the boy horses, fine climate, plenty of space, a possible treasure buried by outlaws somewhere in the hills, as well as mountain lions, rattle snakes, etc. Shortly after, wealthy Patrice Wymore arrives with a race horse, who because he lost his pal, a dog, is down in the dumps. She also has trouble with her personal life, being separated from her husband, Rex Reason. The horse takes to Ladd's dog and regains his bright outlook on life, while Reason shows up at the invitation of Wills, who hopes to set their marriage right again. Reason hopes she has seen reason and has put her horse in its proper place in their relationship. Ladd's dog runs away, encountering a mountain lion and being rescued in the nick of time. When Ladd sees how the horse and dog are attracted to each other, he offers to give her the dog. The marriage situation is also straightened out when she realizes a husband is more important than a horse. Ladd is also waiting to go home with Palmer and his new wife when they show up, having grown a bit since the start of the summer vacation.

X-RAY: This is a neat offering for the family as well as for the youngsters, having a moderate amount of excitement, drama, etc. The tale of a boy growing up is warm and interesting for the most part, and the cast performs well. The direction and production are competent, and the entry should wind up as a good one for the program. The use of CinemaScope and color are of assistance. The screenplay is by Charles Hoffman based on a story by Zoe Akins.

TIP ON BIDDING: Program Rates.

AD LINES: "A Lad Grows Up . . . His Story Is A Warm And Interesting One"; "A Boy . . . A Dog . . . A Horse . . . And Adults And Their Problems."

92M.

United Artists
(Hope)

ESTIMATE: Amusing Hope entry.

CAST: Bob Hope, Rhonda Fleming, Wendell Corey, Jim Davis, Gloria Talbot, Will Wright, Mary Young. Produced by Jack Hope; Executive producer, Bob Hope; directed by Norman McLeod.

STORY: Bob Hope is an insurance salesman who isn't selling, and boss Will Wright is about to fire him until he sells a paid-up life insurance policy paying the beneficiary $100,000 to a Mr. James. It turns out this is outlaw Jesse James, portrayed by Wendell Corey. The latter names as beneficiary Rhonda Fleming. Wright sends Hope to either retrieve the policy or stay with Corey and protect his life so that the company doesn't have to pay off. Corey tolerates him, figuring to either take money that his company will send Hope or to dress him as the outlaw, kill him, and then collect the $100,000, after which he and Fleming can live a life of ease and comfort. The plan backfires as Hope and Fleming fall in love. After he retrieves the policy, Hope and Fleming try to escape, receiving help from unexpected visitors.

X-RAY: Bob Hope, as usual, is good for a load of laughs in an amusing entry of the early west. The situations lend themselves to slapstick as well as obvious humor, and it should prove high fun for the whole family. A sneak preview audience seemed to enjoy the film, particularly its fast-moving climax and surprise ending. The cast is good, as are the direction and production, and the use of color is an added factor. Several songs are to be heard, including "Ain't A-Hankerin'", "Protection," and "Alias Jesse James Theme." Incidentally, Hope's plugging of the film should prove of assistance come playoff time. The screenplay by William Bowers and Daniel D. Beauchamp, based on a story by Robert St. Aubrey and Bert Lawrence.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Higher program or better, depending on situation.

AD LINES: "He Was A Fast Man With A Gal Or A Gun"; "When The Biggest Fun Man Plays The West's Fastest Gunman It's A Double-Barrel Full of Hilarity."

United Artists
(Arnell)

ESTIMATE: Amateurish lower half filler.

CAST: Jack Beutel, Madalyn Trahey, Steve Keyes, Milt Swift, Autumn Moon. Produced by Robert Arnell; directed by Peter Stephens.

STORY: Rodeo rider Jack Beutel is injured and is forced to take a job on the ranch owned by Madalyn Trahey and her brother. A wild stallion has been giving the ranch trouble and it is feared he will cause the mares to run off. Trahey's brother hires two men to kill the stallion. They operate from a plane in a most inhuman manner. Beutel beats them to the stallion and tames it. The killers attack him, but are bested in a gun battle, leaving Beutel and Trahey together.

X-RAY: Sometimes even 73 minutes can be too long, and this is just such a case. Poorly done in all departments, the film looks as if it had been blown up from 16 mm., so uneven is the photography. The less than slight story is padded out via completely unrelated scenes of wild life, and by far the best performer is the horse in the title role, truly a handsome animal. Strictly lower class filler for the least demanding audiences. The screenplay is by Tom Gries.

TIP ON BIDDING: Low rates.

AD LINES: "Mustang . . . As Untamable As The Equine Empire He Ruled"; "A Man, A Horse, And A Slashing Story Of The Modern West."

A. CIVIC-CLUBS

NUMBER 24
Aiding Local Charities Pays Off In Good-Will THEATRE: SW Fabian
ADDRESS: Hoboken, N. J.
MANAGER: Murray Spector

For a recent promotion I consummated a deal with B. G. S. Shoe Corporation, which was tied in locally with Adams Bootery. A gorgeous lobby display of ladies' slippers was set up in the lobby. In addition a 40x60 was tagged to the display telling the kiddies that free gift wrapped slippers were to be distributed to the lucky ones each Saturday matinee for four weeks, or a total of 72 pairs of $4.00 slippers. Six column 10 inch ads were inserted in the Jersey Journal with all the details of the promotion.

To top off this project I organized a parade which took place kick-off Saturday. The parade included the local recreation band, majorettes, Miss Hoboken, Little League football players, a vintage Ford, a sound truck, etc.

In a promoted car rode little Miss Marie Antoinette Minutillo, who was recently the most publicized child in this area, and for whom an all out fund was created and solicited by the townfolks, to assist her in a bladder correction. She was therefore called upon to assist in another great and humane cause, the raising of funds under the auspices of the Jersey Journal for a Miss Bernadette Stange, who miraculously escaped alive from a terrible automobile accident. This girl is greatly in need of funds and has been completed paralyzed due to the unfortunate occurrence.

To assist that cause I combined both promotions into one unit. A wishing well water fountain was promoted from Pan American Airways, and was placed in the theatre lobby for contributions to this cause.

All signs and any other efforts that were required to create the combined promotion was on a no cost basis for the theatre. Large balloons were given away along the route of the parade in addition to plastic aeroplane models promoted from Pan American Airways. Newspaper coverage, including photographs, was plentiful and all in all the combined effort not only created terrific publicity but inestimable good will for the theatre.

We have had excellent success with our

Saturday kiddie matinees by addressing mothers with catch newspaper advertising stressing that "We will be your baby sitter on Saturday afternoons for only 6¼ cents per hour while you do your shopping, rest, or just take it easy."

We give the children a serial, and an added feature and the two regular features booked in for that day. The admission is 25 cents.

Recently we used my pet skunk, Sachet, as an added feature. It turned out to be quite popular with the children as it was displayed in the lobby of the theatre the day of the show. The result was standing room only.

ADDRESS: Staunton, Va.
MANAGER: Frank K. Shaffer

We get our weekly programs gratis by having a merchant's advertisement on the back cover.

The work of preparing the program in its entirety is done by me. I have adopted a name for it, "Movie Chatter" and usually have a brief editorial on the front cover. A recent sample reads: "I'm the proudest man in town. I'm proud . . . that in my own simple way I have the privilege of serving the people of this community. I'm proud . . . when I see whole families come in together . . . and when parents tell me, "I never worry when my child is in your theatre." I'm proud . . . of the contribution we make to the well-being of our town. I'm the proudest man in town . . . I am the manager of your favorite theatre."

I usually submit a layout for the merchant. The local newspaper cooperates and allows me the use of their "ad" services. One iron clad rule is that the merchant must agree to buy the ad for four weeks with no change in

Some of the many facets open to exploit MGM's "The Journey" are shown above. On the left is the traffic-stopping banner erected on a traffic island in the biggest intersection in the world, Times Square, New York City. Since the sign made a pitch for safety, reading, "The Journey will be safe when you drive carefully," It stayed up. Next, Arnold Gates, right, manager, Loew's State, Cleveland, announced a copy. This costs the merchant about $70 to $80 for the month.

As to distribution—we use 2,000 weekly and have an excellent method of getting the community covered. Grocery stores in various sections of the city have clerks stuff programs with their orders. About 500 programs get into homes by this method. About 1,000 are stuffed in the metropolitan Sunday papers; and 250 are mailed to patrons on our mailing list in the surrounding areas of the county.

I believe the leg work, all the effort and time spent in getting out a theatre program is well worth the time and I am sure the merchant benefits from his ad on the back page.

Breakfast Food Samples

THEATRE: Rex,

ADDRESS: Hanworth, Middx., England

MANAGER: P. J. Cordier

The title "Wonderful Things" is a publicity natural so far as getting storekeepers to co-operate. So much so that I had to refuse many who wanted to get in on it after I had established my all time personal record of 22 tieups with varied stores all of which featured film publicity and distributed one or more of the five types of throwaways used in the campaign.

Exactly 1,000 novelty comics of the film, 1,000 photos of the star Frankie Vaughn, 3,000 overprint candy bags, 1,000 competition for the GEC national contest, 1,000 Weetabix flour recipes, and 12 presentation caskets were distributed by this means.

In addition Weetabix supplied 5,000 free sample packets of their famous breakfast food and 12 presentation caskets for prizes. A novelty pack in the form of a book cover carrying credits for the film were provided for the former which were distributed by grocers' stores. At one large store a woman demonstrator showed how to make 'Wonderful Things' with Weetabix flour.

The Weetabix flour tie-up was reflected in an excellent foyer display which became the

No Cost Pamphlet Give-Aways

THEATRE: Forest,

ADDRESS: Forest Park, Ill.

MANAGER: Hugh S. Borland

We have had considerable success in giving away valuable pamphlets put out by various companies and organizations and furnished to us at no cost.

Having obtained a Tie-Tie Gift Wrapping Magic Book at a department store, I contacted the Tie-Tie Company in Chicago and informed them that I would like to give these away to patrons as a public service during the month of December. In return for the books, I would run a screen announcement and give them a 40x60 lobby card telling patrons that the booklets would be given free through their courtesy.

They liked the idea and have been supplying me with booklets every year for 10 years.

This type of promotion creates a lot of word-of-mouth talk from every woman who received a booklet. The booklets are valuable; women will save them, and refer to them from time-to-time. This type of promotion creates a lot of good will between theatre and patron because the theatre is giving something a little extra along with their entertainment at no extra cost. We rubber stamp the booklets "Courtesy of your friendly Forest Theatre."

Another thing that makes the booklet give-away so valuable is that no other theatre is doing this type of public relation promotions; and, of course, it costs us little or nothing.

Working along the same line, we also gave out pamphlets put out by the National Board of Underwriters of Chicago on the prevention of Christmas tree fires; and the distribution of Christmas Carol books to children in a deal set with the John Hancock Life Insurance Company.

We also obtained from the local telephone company copies of a "Blue Book of Telephone Numbers" they issued. This 32 page bound memorandum booklet was intended as a time-saver and a handy place to keep all the numbers you are likely to call. They came in two sizes, one purse size and the other for household uses; and were given to patrons on the same no charge basis.

Welcoming School Personnel

THEATRE: Cozy,

ADDRESS: Gladewater, Texas

MANAGER: W. G. Rike

Recently we sent a letter of welcome to the teachers in our school system and in the neighboring towns in our trade area.

In a tieup with the local Dairy Queen store, we arranged for them to join us in the promotion by furnishing coupons worth 25 cents in trade at their store which were enclosed with our letters. They also paid 50 per cent of the mailing cost. We also enclosed a weekly herald from the theatre. The letter read as follows:

Dear

In line with our policy of greeting the teachers of the schools of Gregg County and in order to acquaint you with the type of entertainment always shown by our Cozy Theatre, we present you herewith two complimentary tickets, which are to be used at your convenience.

The Cozy Theatre takes this means of advising you that they are the "friendly theatre". If at any time we are showing a picture that has historical or educational significance, the management will be pleased to co-operate with you in making it possible for the students to see the picture. In other words, we are eager to co-operate with you and your school.

We want you to feel that the Cozy Theatre is your theatre. A friendly and cordial reception and good entertainment always await you.

Cordially yours,

(Signed)

All boys and "gouls" age 13 were admitted free.

Exactly 13 people in one car were admitted free.

Every 13th car was admitted free.

A dollar bill with 13 in serial number admitted a carload. We kept the dollar.

As added copy "gags" we included the following: If you have been married 13 years—too bad! Stay home and break mirrors—we've got troubles of our own; All witches riding brooms admitted free; any two dollar bill admits carload and we'll give you a dollar change.

Other copy read: "You'll have to walk under a ladder with 13 rungs to get these Snack Bar specials: two bags of popcorn, 13 cents; 13 oz. bottle of soft drinks, 13 cents.

American History Contest

THEATRE: Nishat,

ADDRESS: Karachi, Pakistan

MANAGER: H. Baigmohamed

In connection with our recent showing of "Man Of The West" we held a "Man Of The West" contest. This showed a map of America and listed some of the events in the various states. The contestants were required to pick up the events and mark them in the respective states in the map.

THE NEW 1959

"Showman-of-the-Year" CONTEST

Each individual achievement, selected by the Editorial Board and published in this every-second-week EXPLOITATION Section of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, will receive an Achievement Citation. Five by the same showman published in any one year will receive a SILVER Achievement Citation. And, should any showman ever accomplish ten in the same year, a GOLD Achievement Citation will be awarded. No weekly or monthly prizes will accompany such citations.

will be awarded to the five "SHOWMEN-OF-THE-YEAR" so selected. Alert showmen, interested in the international distinction to be gained from such awards, will recognize that an advantage lies in winning repeated individual published achievements. Address all submissions and photographs to: GEORGE F. NONAMAKER, Feature Editor, MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, 246-48 N. Clarion Street, Philadelphia 7, Penna.

The first two prizes were two Ansco cameras and the second two prizes were four complimentary tickets to the theatre.

The cameras were obtained free of charge from the dealers. The contest proved very successful as bundles of entries poured in at the theatre every day. The contest was particularly popular among the students and the 10,000 entry forms that we had specially printed were all used up.

There was no limit to the number of entries a contestant could submit, but with each entry a ticket stub of the Nishat theatre issued during the screening of 'Man Of The West' was to be attached.

NUMBER 50

Selling An Opera Film

THEATRE: Vagabond,
ADDRESS: Los Angeles, Cal.
MANAGER: Ted North

Selling opera on film is a pretty tough job. Getting the art patrons to leave their TV sets whets their appetites for other films as well, arty or conventional, so we really contributed our share in getting the lost patrons back to the theatres.

The film was Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and before opening date we ran special screenings for movie and music critics, disc jockeys, heads of opera and music clubs, schools and record stores.

We planted art and news breaks in leading papers; and also obtained a listing on music pages detailing the important operatic and musical events.

Advance plugs were obtained on Italian and German radio shows, and also in the foreign press.

The London label puts out an album on the opera, "Don Giovanni", starring Cesare Siepi and Lisa Della Casa, who are also in the film. London's promotion man arranged for disc jockeys to play the album, and leading record stores had album displays plugging the theatre dates. The theatre lobby was made available for an album display.

The heads of music, vocal and instrumental departments of the schools were invited guests on opening night. In return they publicized the film to students and other faculties. We also had reduced rates for students.

Program cards were mailed to schools, record stores, women's clubs, and a mailing list of art lovers secured from the manager of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra and Opera Association.

Opening night was termed "A Night At The Opera" and invited guests included leading socialites who sponsor most of the musical art programs.

The selling job was engineered by a three-man team—Sydney Linden, district manager; E. D. Harris, publicist for the Rosener Theatres, and myself.

This is the 40x60 John J. Corbett, Strand, Scranton, Pa., used to exploit his giant passes given every lady attending a recent "Sweetheart Night."

received a shower of 12 prizes of assorted merchandise donated by merchants including a grocery, a service station, a bank, a florist, a music shop, a photography store, a cleaning shop, a beauty parlor, etc.

We also obtained good results with the following form letter which went to area residents:

"Hello there: Dad, do you ever come home from work and find Mom just worn to a frazzle? Sure you do! That's when a woman needs to get out of the house and relax. She needs fun and entertainment . . . and just turning on the television set won't do the trick; because if she stays home, she's going to keep right on feeling like a house-wife. BUT—if you say, "Honey, let's go to a movie to-night," and you go out to the theatre together, she feels like a girl on a date again! Why not make her feel like that more often, Dad? Bring her to the movies. She'll love you for it . . . and you'll BOTH have a wonderful time! We'll be looking forward to seeing you; and are enclosing a FREE PASS for Mom with our compliments. And remember, Dad, kiddies under 12 years of age are free.

Very truly yours,"

We also found it quite profitable to book the serial, "Zorro's Fighting Legion" mid-week. We got this off to a fast start by gimmicking it up by advertising Zorro in person. This was not hard to do as I did the costumed impersonation myself, including, of course, the mask. The small fry went for this in a big way.

Another instance of our "getting into the act" resulted when we held a midnite stage show in connection with a horror show on the screen. This was a magic show and during the show I was nailed in a special coffin like box, made by a local lumber company, by members of the police and fire departments. The idea was that the magician was to release me without disturbing the nails. It was surprising how much interest my personal participation in the show aroused.

Incidentally, we featured in our advertising of the show the fact that it, and subsequent attractions, was presented on a special $2500 portable stage directly in front of our screen.

NUMBER 36

Giant Pass Ideas

THEATRE: Strand,
ADDRESS: Scranton, Pa.
MANAGER: John G. Corbett

Recently we came up with the idea of a giant pass. A stunt that can be used anytime. These measures 14½ inches x 11 inches and read: "This is your special sweetheart giant pass. Present this card at the box office (date) and with the purchase of one adult ticket, you will receive a free ticket for your sweetheart to see a giant Hollywood production at the Strand Theatre. This is NOT a joke . . . it is an authentic admission ticket offer . . . the reason for the huge size of it is to impress on you the bigness of this movie you are going to see."

We used it for our Valentine Day promotion in which we had strictly a man's attraction and we advertised that all women attending the opening day, Valentine's Day, would receive a "Sweetheart" pass.

The result is that we picked up a lot of women who would not have come. We dated these two for one passes for the following week opening day's show; and the result was that our opening on this show picked up considerably.

These giant sweetheart passes will be used again to give us a shot in the arm for several more shows.

PARAMOUNT is conducting a big campaign to pull television audiences away from their sets and into theatres showing "Tempest" and will include ads in the TV sections of daily and Sunday newspapers in all parts of the country. These ads will be placed in conjunction with local ad campaigns on the film, and will be in addition to regular movie-page advertising on the film. The drive to bring TV audiences into the theatres includes a full-scale ad and publicity campaign over television itself, and through the seven million circulation of TV Guide magazine, which will carry nationally in the current issue a two-page, four-color advertisement on "Tempest." This ad will hammer home the fact that the spectacular film epic can be seen "only on the big motion picture theatre screen." Paramount also has plans for countrywide billboard advertising, substantial radio promotion, major magazine and newspaper attention, star tours, tieups and special events in the over-all "Tempest" campaign.

UNITED ARTISTS has set a nation-wide tieup for "Some Like It Hot" with Movie Star, Inc., slip manufacturer, which will be promoted by 18,000 retail outlets. Key factors will be 250,000 hang-tags attached to as many slips and carrying film credits, which also will be plugged on 8x10 polyethylene bags containing the garments. The 18,000 women's shops and department stores will be circularized via flyers prepared by Movie Star, Inc.

MGM is giving "The Mating Game" a promotional push with radio campaigns leading the way and exploitation stunts adding further excitement. Debbie Reynolds' MGM Record of the title song is already moving up on the disc jockey and best-seller lists. To capitalize on this, MGM is going heavily into radio spots for the campaign, backing up the newspaper and national magazine advertisements. A "mate-date" promotion has been worked out with numbered cards, boys printed on blue stock and the girls on pink, and distributed at high schools. The teenagers are invited to find their mate-date with the matching number and win guest admissions to the theatre. Other exploitation devices include "his-and-hers" store displays, sound trucks, hay wagons with couples perched atop, and newsstand tieups with the Signet books, etc.

COLUMBIA is planning a tie-in with the Boy Scouts of America on "It Happened To Jane." The Scouts figure prominently in the story, with Doris Day as a Den mother, her screen son a Cub Scout and Jack Lemmon plays the role of a Scout Master. The organization will give full cooperation in publicity and promotion campaigns and will participate in exploiting engagements of the film on a nation-wide basis. Radio platters and TV clips featuring Miss Day eulogizing the Boy Scouts, along with plugs for the picture, will be aired. Feature stories, containing picture plugs, will appear in Boy's Life Magazine, the official scout publication. The Revell Company is also plugging its participation in the film campaign through local retailers of its model trains. One dealer in each city will be given the opportunity of tying in with the exhibitor on co-op advertising and special displays of Revell trains in the theatre lobby. Revell will provide model railroad equipment as prizes for theatre patrons entering contests based on the operation of trains in these displays, and back the campaign nationally with a two-color tie-in point-of-sale poster.

THEATRE: Nortown,
ADDRESS: Toronto, Canada
MANAGER: Michael King

In days when we are competing with home stereo and hi-fi I'm one of those people who have joined the multitude of theatre men who think that the picture on the screen and the sound we present are still the most important things about a cinema.

Consequently we put a sign up for display in our lounge area reading: "Picture Out of Focus? Sound level too high (or low)? Please see a member of our staff so that we can adjust it. We won't know you're not satisfied unless you tell us!"

The sign has been up for about two months and my staff tell me we've had very few requests from patrons—so I hope they've all been satisfied.

At least, it is one way of saying to the patron that we ARE interested in their enjoyment.

King and Queen, Gino Cervi and Lea Padovani. Padovani, who detests Gardner, thereupon expresses admiration for the frescoes and suggests that Franciosa be named Painter to the Court. In this post, Franciosa soon learns that Nazzari is Padovani's favorite and is also betraying Spain in favor of France. During a carnival, which the people have turned into a demonstration against Nazzari, Gardner and Franciosa slip away to his studio where they realize they have fallen in love. Nazzari and police search Gardner's home. Because she mixed with the anti-Nazzari demonstrators at the carnival, Padovani has ordered a severe punishment for her, but Nazzari reveals he has reduced the punishment to immediate exile. Franciosa abandons his work and races in pursuit. He paints many canvasses of her. Finally, Nazzari arrives with word of the French invasion plans. He asks Gardner to join him in the betrayal. When she refuses, he orders Franciosa to return to Madrid at once, otherwise he will be tried by the Inquisition. When he refuses to leave her, Gardner stages a false love scene with Carlo Rizzo, an old lover. In a rage, Franciosa flees, arriving in Madrid, exhausted and dangerously ill. After a long period of illness, he draws bitingly satirical sketches depicting a faithless Gardner and a corrupt Spain. These and the nude painting, "The Naked Maja," cause his arrest by the Inquisition. Gardner goes to Padovani and pleads for Franciosa's life. Nazzari arranges for Franciosa's release and as his price again asks Gardner to join him in his betrayal of Spain. When she refuses, he orders her death by a slow poison administered by a servant in his pay. The French troops enter Madrid, bringing with them misery and tyranny. Franciosa learns Gardner is seriously ill, and rushes to the Palace. He meets Rizzo, who tells him the true story of the false love scene Gardner played to save Franciosa's life. In her bed chamber, the lovers have a tender reconciliation before she dies in his arms.

X-RAY: This huge costume spectacle has been carefully directed and the production is on a big scale. It comes to life frequently, but as is the case with most subjects of its type, has some static moments. The cast turn in commendable performances. There are plenty of love scenes, as well as plenty of action in the carnival and revolt sequences near the end. There is also, however, a sort of pastoral quietness rather than fiery passion in the lengthy love passages and the nude posing for the famous painting is played down. It is a very long film, one that will find its best market with the sophisticated patron. Best results, most likely, will come from heavy selling of the American-known stars. The large screen process and the color are other assets. This is from a story by Oscar Saul and Talbot Jennings.

(WarnerColor)

CAST: Randolph Scott, Virginia Mayo, Karen Steele, Michael Dante, Andrew Duggan, Michael Pate, Wally Brown, John Day, Walter Barnes. Produced by Henry Blanke; directed by Budd Boetticher.

STORY: During a crucial period in the Civil War, the Union Army decides to subsidize the overland stage which is to bring daily shipments of gold from California. Captain Randolph Scott, who once ran the lines, is ordered to do the job. Enroute, he meets Michael Dante, who fought with the North and lost an arm. He's on his way home to his wife, Karen Steele, and his farm. In the town nearby, Scott finds that agent Andrew Duggan has resigned, eliminated the stage line station and its equipment, and is working for the Confederacy. Duggan has also married Scott's one-time girl friend, Virginia Mayo. Professional killer Michael Pate is Duggan's right hand, carrying out his orders to disrupt stage service. Scott hires Dante to open a way station on his land, and war is declared with Dante being fatally wounded. Duggan breaks with Pate over the bloodshed, but is himself killed. The town sides with Scott at the showdown, during which Pate and others are killed or driven off permanently. The stage goes on schedule while Mayo goes back east. It's obvious that Scott and Steele will be united.

X-RAY: The subject matter is a bit different here, and there is a sufficiency of action and intrigue to please most audiences who go for this type of entry. Scott is his usual efficient self and is well supported by others in the cast. The direction and production are good. The entry should do alright as part of the program. The screenplay is by Berne Giler, based on a story by him and Albert Shelby LeVino.

TIP ON BIDDING: Fair Program Rates.

MELODRAMA

(English-made)

ESTIMATE: Ordinary Scotland Yard who-done-it.

CAST: John Mills, Noelle Middleton, Derek Farr, Roland Culver, Wilfrid Hyde White, Mervyn Johns, Lionel Jeffries, Rene Roy, Diana Lambert, Lisa Daniely, David Williams, John Gordon. Produced by Peter Rogers; directed by Gerald Thomas.

STORY: Doctor John Mills innocently becomes involved with a gang of international criminals and finds the body of a beautiful woman in his apartment. He decides to investigate on his own and enlists the aid of his fiancée, Noelle Middleton, and his best friend, Derek Farr, but meets a dead end. Meanwhile, he keeps being questioned by Scotland Yard men David Williams and Wilfrid-Hyde White. After Mills makes contact with the criminals, the Yard men enlist his aid in rounding them up. Mills accomplishes this and Farr is exposed as the ring leader.

X-RAY: The circle is what you most likely will be running around in trying to figure this one out. Frankly, we did not understand it. The complicated screenplay is by Francis Durbridge. The acting is above average for this sort of thing with many minor parts excellently portrayed. There is no end of action with all the running around, automobile chases, etc., and the London backgrounds are interesting, as is the insight into the workings of famous Scotland Yard. Production and direction are of average calibre, but so much is left unexplained throughout that the film will do only as program fare and in art spots.

62M.

Joseph Brenner Associates
(French-made) (Filmed in Africa)
(English narration)

ESTIMATE: African rites for the lower half.
CREDITS: Presented by Herbert Bregstein. No other credits available.

STORY: This is a film record of a United Nations Museum of Man expedition into French West Africa and a visit to the Toma Tribe, showing many of their primitive customs.

X-RAY: Although the black and white photography is most of the time not of the best, due to conditions under which the film was made, and while the big feature of the subject, the first filming of the native fertility dance, never comes off due to nature's intervening and native superstition, this subject proves interesting and fascinating along anthropological lines. There is quite a bit of native nudity shown, and some scenes of blood sacrifices of animals that may repel. The narration is good and clearly explains what is taking place. This can be either ballyhooed sensationally or sold conservatively as filler for the program.

AD LINES: "Secret Rites Of The Jungle"; "First Time On The Screen—The Toma Tribe Of French West Africa."

Heroes And Sinners

DRAMA

Janus
(French-made)
(Dubbed in English)

ESTIMATE: Highly interesting, exploitable import.

CAST: Curt Jurgens, Maria Felix, Yves Montand, Jean Servais, Gerard Oury, Elizabeth Manet. Produced by Raymond Froment; directed by Yves Ciampi.

STORY: Yves Montand, ex-fighter pilot, arrives in French Africa, a territory governed by the Negro population, with a cache of diamonds which he acquired by accident from a smuggling syndicate. He plans to sell the diamonds and start his own freight air line. Staying at the hotel operated by bitter Jean Servais, he is attracted to Maria Felix, wife of Servais. Servais is insanely jealous and resents the position of equality the Negro population holds. Felix has been having an affair with a wealthy native, but is reluctant to leave the weak Servais. She and Montand fall in love and plan to leave together after the sale of diamonds. German Curt Jurgens arrives on the scene, sent by the syndicate to recover the gems, and Montand's position appears hopeless. Jurgens is an ex-pilot also, having flown with the Luftwaffe, and he and Montand have a growing respect for each other. Realizing that the diamonds are their last chance at a better life, they plan to flee together and start the freight line business as partners. Realizing that Felix intends to leave him, Servais, demented with jealousy, steals the diamonds. Jurgens and Montand give chase, and in the ensuing battle, Felix is killed, as is Servais. The diamonds are lost forever in the river, but Montand saves Jurgens' life. In their respect for each other, the two ex-heroes have achieved a victory of sorts.

X-RAY: Fascinating and different African backgrounds and an adult, dramatic story make this import an eminently satisfying screen experience. The cast is excellent and tight direction maintains interest on high. The relationship between native and white in the African locale depicted might make this a questionable entry in some situations, particularly in the south, but exhibitors who know their clientele have an opportunity to present something offbeat enough to be different, and yet containing the elements of intrigue and adventure that should satisfy the wider audience as well. The dubbing job is remarkable, with the voices eminently suited to the characters and the synchronization amazingly accurate. All in all, this is a superior import, best suited to adult audiences because of the frank love scenes, and deserving of a wider play than the standard art offering. Screenplay is by Ciampi and J. L. Bost.

AD LINES: "As Hot As The Tropical Land Where It Happened . . . Explosive As Africa's Spreading Social Revolution"; "Violence And Desire As Heroes And Sinners Battle And Love In A Strange, Exotic Land."

USING HEADS INSTEAD OF AXES

IN THESE DAYS of economy drives, when exigencies of the moment, and duties to the stockholders, cause many an axe to swing and many a head to "fall by the wayside," it is refreshing to find that a young lady out Detroit way has a very sensible alternative to suggest.

Our correspondent tells us that Lucille Carver, of the United Detroit Theatres Circuit, points out that virtually every major distributor sends out frequent mailings of elaborate material that is extremely expensive. From brochure to art, to cuts, to mailing jacket, she estimates that many must cost from a half to a whole dollar per unit to devise and to execute. On top of that there is the addressing cost, and the postage is rarely as low as 12 cents each, with most in the 40 cents and up class.

Using one recent mailing piece from a particular distributor as an example, Miss Carver noted: one copy addressed to an executive of United Detroit who left that organization six years ago; two copies addressed to two officers who died; four copies to personnel who haven't the remotest interest; and two copies to the only two remaining executives who read them. Putting her figures very low, she estimates that between $2 and $5 worth of such printing and postage is thrown away by their central administration office alone, on each and every working day. So you could multiply that by 250 in any one year.

Now, says Miss Carver, if every theatre, circuit, buying combine, trade paper, magazine, newspaper, and TV or radio station is similarly wastefully serviced on a national scale, isn't it true that such mailings could be cut out altogether, or at least reduced one fourth, without reducing their effectiveness? And a lot of money saved?

Good point, Miss Carver!

We might add, don't such elaborate mailings, in their slow cumbersome way, overlap the much faster, more interesting, and more serviceable trade press? And, at least in the A.B.C. audited trade press, no distributor would be paying for the coverage of retired executives, dead men, or disinterested men. None of these latter will renew their subscriptions!

THE HIGH COST OF "HEROES"

A FRIEND of ours, in a nameless territory, runs a couple of drive-ins in a relatively competition-free area, with three changes per week (Sun.-Mon.-Tues.; Wed.-Thurs.; and Fri.-Sat.). While he has been open for quite a few years, he still gets away with "oldies," and give him a good Technicolor western and he doesn't mind repeating on himself, or even repeating the same picture twice in the same summer. And, in his own head, as well as on his "Film Row," he has established a price for his mid-week two-day show, always a double-feature, of $50 complete.

So, year in and out, he bought "yards" of film, dated his shows, worked late hours, paid his bills, and made a living.

Then, a few months ago, a new young and aggressive branch manager was appointed by one of the national distributors. When our friend dropped in to sign for 40 or 50 old pictures for the new drive-in-season he was told that the former $50 price had to be $60. The fact that the same theatre had played some of the same combinations for $50 last year had "nothing to do with it." $60 was the price, take it or leave it!

So our friend left it! He had little difficulty adding a few pictures here and a few pictures there, and he'll have plenty to last through the season. But this particular distribution office has lost a customer. A customer not only for a flock of Wednesday and Thursday double features, but for the higher priced week-end dates that used to be given to the distributor's newer product. That $2,500 worth of "oldies" they'll never make up. And all because of the $500 extra that a new branch manager tried to gouge in order to prove to the "home office" that he is a better salesman and a tougher "film man" than his predecessor. To make himself a "hero," his company has lost $2,500 this year.

This is just one incident, and the $2,500 loss probably won't be noticed by the particular distributor; but we have seen this identical situation repeated time after time. We sometimes wonder just how much such "heroes" cost individual distributors each year?

Maybe this little true yarn can serve a useful purpose. Maybe if each reader who has had such experiences with such a "hero," were to tear out this page and send it to him, he'd wise up to the need to let the other fellow live too. And he'd learn just a little faster that a good "film man" keeps his accounts alive, and doesn't try to knock their brains out with tough and impossible prices. "Heroes can learn, too!"

THE "BEAR" FACTS . . . AND THAT'S NO "BULL"

LAST OCTOBER, when we analyzed the 20th Century-Fox "team," and forecast a potential annual profit by the company of $10,000,000, we also ran a small ad in the Wall Street Journal drawing the attention of "amusements investors" to the particular issue. Not only did we pick up some subscriptions from investment trusts, banks, and investment people, but the Fox stock jumped several points.

Again, in the issue of March 18, when Columbia carried an exclusive announcement of the books, plays, and other story properties that they owned, and would film in the near future, we again carried a small ad in the same Wall Street Journal, referring to it. Check your papers! From Wednesday to Friday that stock jumped $4\frac{3}{8}$ points, a sizeable spurt under any conditions.

We make no claims. But it does look as though some investors have confidence in MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR.

Letters . . .

UNSOLICITED • The letters from readers which appear on this page are not solicited. MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR does not suggest questions to readers in order to provide a flow of letters.

From DOVER, N.H.

Motion picture exhibitors, farm people, children waiting for school busses on dark and chilly mornings, and many others have suffered long from Daylight Saving Time. Now there is an opportunity for them to do something about it.

Representative Harley O. Staggers of Keyser, West Virginia, has introduced a bill (H. R. 1354) in the national House of Representatives, to effectively strengthen the Federal Standard Time act, and to restore standard time to the nation throughout the entire year.

This is properly a matter of broad national policy, and copies of the bill, and material to assist in recording support, are available either from the writer or from Eber Cockley, Meyersdale, Pa. Let us hear if you wish to support Mr. Staggers' effort.

C. WESLEY THOMPSON
23 East Concord Street

EDITOR'S NOTE: The odds may be long, but it may be worth the effort.

From LOWELL, MASS.

The excellence and the convenience of the REVIEWS and SERVICE SECTION forms in MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR are of tremendous value to a theatre manager. In my book, these two services are further enhanced by your advance coverage, and by the easily found references on past products. The SHORTS PARADE has been extremely helpful. So I hope that your system of presenting information will continue in its full and valued scope.

ARTHUR J. KEENAN
Strand Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Thanks! We try!

From HERRIN, ILL.

For the past 40 years I have been a projectionist here, and MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR is like part of my tools. Not only does it give me accurate running times for my daily time schedules, but the pink and yellow saveable sections tell me whether it is CinemaScope, VistaVision, SuperScope, or wide screen; and whether it is Technicolor, DeLuxe Color, Eastman Color, or black and white. And knowing this in advance is a big help.

So I was a subscriber to Showmen's Trade Review for many years, and was carried over when you combined. The result has been valuable, and no theatre should be without MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR plus Showmen's Trade Review.

GUY JACQUES, JR.
Marlow's Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Booth, boxoffice, manager's office, sign shop, owner's home. We wonder just how many places connected with the operation of a theatre find their weekly trade paper of service.

From RIDGEWAY, ILL.

I think MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR is doing a fine job.

C. W. MINER, Manager-Partner
Strand Theatre

From LEWISTOWN, PA.

We are extremely anxious to obtain the names of exhibitors, theatres, and areas in the state of Pennsylvania that do not currently have the right to play movies on Sundays—and are interested in remedying this situation.

HAROLD D. COHEN
The Embassy Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: All who are interested should communicate with Mr. Cohen directly. And don't forget that John G. Broumas, Transamerica Theatres Circuit, has been battling single-handedly in the courts for years. We know he is interested.

From FARMINGTON, MICH.

Do you have an up-to-date list of correct percentages, consistent with good business, that one could apply in approximating the proper film rental, rent, employees salaries, etc.?

E. J. HOHLER
Civic Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: If you will refer to the editorial page of the July 23, 1958, issue, you will find the results of a Theatre Owners of America poll of 500 roofed theatres of all types, and the percentages of overhead that were then in effect. If you don't have a copy of this issue, let us know and we'll try to find a "stat" or something.

From PINEVILLE, KY.

CHARLES MILLER, Co-Owner

DETROIT DATELINE

Appreciation has been expressed here by Milton H. London, president of Allied Theatre of Michigan, to MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR for its publication of an article (issue of March 11) concerning release of bootleg 16mm. and 35mm. films on current releases, to private organizations. Such comment in the trade press has already alleviated conditions which were steadily growing worse. "Distributors, too," says Mr. London, "have been made keenly aware of the abuse, and have been extremely cooperative in tracking down the source of unfair boxoffice competition. In some instances out-of-line bookings have been caught in advance and cancelled".

EDITOR'S NOTE: Literally scores of letters like the above have been received, and more continue to arrive in each mail. The work is in progress. You can expect it as a usual service in the April 15 issue.

From GASTONIA, N. C.

Re your editorial ("THERE ARE TIMES WHEN YOU MUST FIGHT 'CITY HALL'")—issue of March 18), I have found only by accident that there is another, and far more dangerous to the theatre, use to which our local schools are being put. Very quietly, and on the hush-hush, regular movie bills have been exhibited for admission charges, for more than a year.

I now find that every Monday, with students paying an admission price of 20 cents, we have had another "theatre" competing with us in the local colored high school. Features that ran in the last two weeks were "TAMMY AND THE BACHELOR" and "THE FASTEST GUN ALIVE". Only by chance, one of the students let the cat out of the bag, so I questioned some of the others and all confirmed the facts. I can't believe that this would qualify under the heading of "Visual Education".

Today, I got in touch with the local office of the State Department of Revenue, and they have advised me that the practice of any school property becoming a "theatre" is illegal. They promise to take steps to stop it.

H. M. KILPATRICK, Manager
Palace Theatre

From TEHERAN, IRAN

We have written to R.K.O. Pictures, asking whether we could buy the distribution rights for "JOAN OF ARC" starring Ingrid Bergman, but in reply they only told us that it was no longer their property. Following it up, we asked who was the present owner, but our several letters on this point have not been answered. Could you assist us by possibly tracing the ownership of this film and advising whether or not we can buy it for the territory of Iran?

MOSTAFA AKHAVAN
Moulin Rouge Cinema Co. Ltd.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We checked. Distribution rights for Iran were purchased in 1958 by Salah Aizer, Cinema Rex, Avenue Lalezar, Teheran. Sorry!

Industry Bats .500 In N.Y.

ALBANY—The motion picture industry emerged victorious in the battle over extension of "censorship" during the 1959 legislative session, but suffered a lesser defeat when the Assembly, by a vote of 63 to 62, defeated the Marchi Film-Fees Reduction Bill after the Senate had unanimously adopted it.

The Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material which had originally introduced four film bills and later cut the number to two—one dealing with film advertising that was "obscene, indecent, lewd, or lascivious," and the other providing a relatively mild "classification" bill—formally gave up the fight the day before the gavel fell for the year.

It did so in a report which criticized the content and advertising of certain-type pictures, but stated that "a combination of factors has led this committee to recommend that all legislative action on this subject (motion pictures and motion picture advertising) be deferred."

BROADWAY GROSSES

Holiday Draws Smash Returns

NEW YORK—Holiday business in the Broadway first-runs approached smash proportions right down the line. The advent of some strong new product also helped.

According to usually reliable sources reaching MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, the breakdown was as follows:

"THE SOUND AND THE FURY" (20th-Fox). Paramount ($39,435)*—The opening session was sure to hit $53,000.

"GREEN MANSIONS" (MGM). Radio City Music Hall ($147,610)—Thursday through Sunday accounted for $114,500 with the second apt to reach $205,000. Easter stage show.

"RIO BRAVO" (WB). Roxy ($55,405)—Wednesday through Sunday hit $49,000, with the second week sure of $65,000. Stage show.

"TEMPEST" (Paramount). Capitol ($33,350)—The opening week could hit $70,000.

"AL CAPONE" (Allied Artists). Victoria ($22,900)—Opened to a smash $55,000 first week.

"SEPARATE TABLES" (UA). Astor ($25,630)—Holding up remarkably well with the 15th week claimed at $25,000.

"SOME LIKE IT HOT" (UA). Loew's State reopened completely refurbished with less seats than before, with the opening day solid at $16,850.

"THE SHAGGY DOG" (Buena Vista). Odeon announced that the second week would hit $27,500.

"SLEEPING BEAUTY" (Disney-BV). Criterion stated that the sixth week would tally $28,000.

"THE DIARY OF ANNE FRANK" (20th-Fox). RKO Palace was still capacity on reserved seat basis.

Columbus Paper Hits Censorship Proposals

COLUMBUS, O.—Opposition to film censorship was proclaimed by the Columbus Star, weekly tabloid published by the Wolfe organization, in an editorial titled "Censorship Threat." The Star is published by the same newspaper firm which owns the Columbus Dispatch, which has frequently called for a restoration of Ohio's "mild" brand of film review.

The Star noted that the Senate Judiciary committee currently is considering proposals by Senator Robert Shaw, Columbus Republican, and Senator Thomas O'Shaughnessy, Columbus Democrat, to control films shown in Ohio. The Star said that both Shaw and O'Shaughnessy are opposed to censorship in principle, "but they feel—and they've got a lot of support from parent-teacher groups—that something has to be done about the matter."

"Both Senators agree that Hollywood itself does a pretty fair job of policing its own films. But they're worried about films produced by fly-by-nighters—and some foreign films—that delve into taboo subjects and try to capitalize on the little bit of lust that seems to be in all of us," said the Star.

"Opponents of the two bills put forth as their chief argument that this kind of censorship responsibility begins at home. The Senators agree, but they also point out that teenagers are on their own a lot and need protection from this sort of thing. . . .

"We agree with Sen. Shaw and Sen. O'Shaughnessy that something should be done about some of these distasteful film offerings, but so far we haven't seen anyone with what we think is the answer."

Cohn Joins Col. Realty

V. C. Raises $2,700,000

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—The more than 9,000 showmen who comprise the membership of Variety Clubs International raised and contributed over $2,700,000 during 1958 in behalf of handicapped and underprivileged children, it was reported to the organization's annual convention today by International Heart Chairman Nathan D. Golden of Washington, D.C.

This sum, Golden added, directly benefitted more than 153,000 persons and countless others were aided indirectly through the varied activities of Variety's 46 "tents" in this country and abroad.

UA Cracks Down On Delinquent Exhibs

Six-Point Sales Policy In Effect With "Some Like It Hot"; Adjustment Barred Prior To Payment

By MEL KONECOFF

NEW YORK—United Artists cracked down last week on exhibitors who are delinquent in fulfilling contracts and/or who attempt to adjust same on a "do-it-yourself" policy, with the issuance of a new company sales policy which is to guide all sales personnel in the future.

William Heineman, vice-president in charge of sales, issued the following six-point dictum:

1) "We intend to negotiate and market each and every picture on terms based upon their individual merits.

2) "We shall insist upon being paid our earned film rental on percentage, or flats, as per the terms of the contract.

3) "We will not consent to exhibitors making their own adjustments.

4) "We will not permit exhibitors to withhold our earned rental in order to force adjustments.

5) "If an exhibitor refuses to pay after playing and withholds, unreasonably, our producer's money, we shall insist upon payment before continuing to do any further business with that account.

6) "If, after a picture has played on percentage terms and the earned film rental has been paid in full, and, in the judgment of the producer and United Artists, some relief or revision of the percentage terms is justified, such relief will be given."

Heineman reported that this policy has already been put into effect with the release of "Some Like It Hot," and the six points have been drilled into every member of the sales staff. The latter must operate within these regulations, said Heineman.

The policy, he stated, is not aimed at any one class of exhibitors, but all qualify whether they be large or small, independent or circuit.

He reported that hundreds of accounts have not paid one percentage contract as signed. Every contract had to be adjusted. It seemed to him that getting something remitted from the exchange seemed to be an obsession with many. He knew of no other business where the customer refuses to pay the agreed price after he uses the merchandise, and he didn't think that United Artists was asking anything but what they were entitled to receive.

The radical change has been made because, said Heineman, at one point there was $1,600,000 outstanding on "The Vikings," this amount being withheld by exhibitors. At one point, over $500,000 was outstanding on "The Defiant Ones." He deplored that in the past, sales staffers had to make a sale and negotiate a deal, and then, after the picture played had to beg for payment per contract. Said he, "The look-see is gone forever." He was referring to cases where the exhibitor said he would look at a picture and then see what UA should get.

"We are," said Heineman, "trying to market our pictures on their merits, and we certainly are not trying to take advantage of exhibitors. However, we have had many pictures that have not brought in enough to cover prints and advertising, and even in these cases exhibitors still demand adjustments. When the figures are in, we can't go back and ask these exhibitors to come through with more money

UA Withdraws "Maja" Suit; Battle Of Ballyhoo Won

NEW YORK—The legal proceeding by United Artists against the Postmaster General has been withdrawn by mutual agreement and without prejudice to any future action which may become necessary, it was announced last week by Seymour M. Peyser, vice-president and general counsel of United Artists.

"The Government affidavits state that the proposed advertisement for 'The Naked Maja' containing a photographic reproduction of the famous Goya painting with the same title, was never banned or declared to be unmailable by the Post Office Department," Peyser stated. "Prior to the receipt of these affidavits we certainly were led to believe that the Post Office had definitely expressed such an opinion. In the light of these subsequent unequivocal statements, and in the absence of any indication in the papers filed by the Government that they regard the ad containing the nude figure as obscene or otherwise unmailable, we intend to take them at their word and to proceed with our advertising campaign as originally planned."

to help us out on our losses."

Many exhibitors insist they want a fair percentage of the gross as their share of the profits, and in many cases, these adjustments come out of the pockets of UA and its producers when the picture winds up in the red. Reported Heineman, "Big Country," because of its high cost, will wind up in the red, yet exhibitors will demand adjustments because they are not satisfied with the business it has done.

The part of the policy covering adjustments never has and never will cover bidding situations. The latter, incidentally, are increasing every month because there are not enough of the top pictures that are doing the business around, and exhibitors keep asking for more and more bidding, hoping to get their fair share of the business. He admitted in many cases that a lot of theatres are over-bidding, and UA does not take any pleasure in this situation. He estimated that there were between 300 and 400 theatres engaged in bidding, and some of these are so small that they shouldn't be included.

Reverting to the theme of selling and collecting on contracts, Heineman stated that the company will use other methods to collect due monies besides the dropping of servicing the accounts, especially if the amounts involved are large enough. Said he, "We'll try everything first and then go to court if we have to."

Heineman didn't discount the possibility of conciliation entering into the picture, but one of the producer representatives present, George Schaefer, refused to allow a third party to decide what amount of money should be coming to a producer unless UA really insisted on such a procedure.

Schaefer stated that if in the opinion of UA an exhibitor is not a good credit risk, then we don't expect UA to sell our pictures to that account. This was backed by other producer representatives present, including Seymour Poe, representing Edward Small, Kirk Douglas, Security Pictures; Morris Lafko, for the Michael Todd Co.; Schaefer, representing

Limited Pay-TV Tests Approved By FCC

WASHINGTON—The Federal Communications Commission last fortnight evidently bowed to the demands of the Harris anti-toll television resolution by writing added restrictions into application forms for experimental licenses although announcing that it was ready to consider applications for pay-as-you-see TV.

Under the formula laid down by the commission, each toll system would be limited to test operations over one station in one city.

With five different systems in the field, this would mean that the experiments would be limited to five cities.

In addition, the commission specified that costs of adapting sets to pick up toll telecasts must not be placed upon the set owner. These costs would have to be borne by the station or the system providing its service to the subscriber.

"Until a decision can be reached as to the definitive establishment of a subscription TV service using broadcast facilities, the public should not be called upon to purchase any special receiving equipment required for subscription TV operations, but not needed for the reception of 'free' TV broadcasts," the Commission stated.

Radio Campaign Pushed

LITTLE ROCK—The convention of the Independent Theatre Owners of Arkansas last fortnight at the Marion Hotel was addressed by George Roscoe, TOA's director of exhibitor relations, speaking for TOA head George G. Kerasotes.

Roscoe told the exhibitors that should production-distribution fail to match the $165,000 raised by exhibition for the radio phase of the industry's business building program, the TOA "will make every effort to salvage the material that has been prepared thus far so that in some manner it will be made available to every exhibitor who wants to use it." He further pledged that "if, for any reason, MPAA doesn't match the money, you who have made contributions will have your money returned."

He urged the exhibitors not to "let up for a minute" their pressure on Congress on the various issues affecting them. Roscoe indicated that prospects were "good" for the passage of Representative Oren Harris' bill to outlaw pay TV. He also urged exhibitors to buy stock in the film companies, and assured them that "in no way" will ACE supplant existing exhibitor organizations.

Named to head the ITOA for the next year was Nona White, office manager, Rowley United Theatres. She will also serve as the unit's representative to the board of directors of TOA. A former secretary-treasurer of the group, she has the honor of being the first woman president of an exhibitor group.

Others elected at the convention were Brown, board chairman; Bruce Young, executive vice-president; and J. T. Hitt, secretary-treasurer.

Among those who reported an increase in business this year and who were optimistic about the future were John H. Rowley, president, Rowley United Theatres of Dallas; and M. S. McCord, head, United Theatres, North Little Rock.

Must End Duplication Of Effort, Reade Tells Exhibitor Show-A-Rama

KANSAS CITY—If the motion picture industry would utilize and coordinate the superabundance of associations, organizations, and committees now in existence, it could make great strides toward prosperity, Walter Reade, Jr., former Theatre Owners of America head, declared last fortnight in his keynote address to the joint convention and Show-a-Rama of the Missouri-Illinois Theatre Owners, and the United Theatre Owners of the Heart of America, at the Muhlenbach Hotel.

Calling on exhibition to make these tools "productive," and to eliminate the cross-purposes and duplication of effort, Reade pleaded for an end of "petty jealousies and cat-calling at distribution" and substitution of "brains, brawn, money, time, and above all, imagination" to save the industry.

He declared that in TOA and other exhibitor organizations, in ACE, COMPO, and MPAA, and other industry groups, exhibitors have the means to their own salvation. However, he said, the duplication of efforts and committees, in such fields as research, relief from governmental controls, business building, and standardization of projection, among others, "has made the accomplishments of all these committees, with all their well-intentioned, hard-working members, very small indeed."

He said that the movie industry has not coordinated its efforts although it has the leadership and tools in the organizations and committees on paper. "We have our best brains available on groups charged with research, securing more and better product, capitalizing on foreign films, securing relief from government controls, developing better projection and sound. Let them be more than just names on an agenda. Make them real, make them breathe, and above all make them productive for now, for the future, and for what we know can be a greater motion picture industry."

George Kerasotes, president, TOA, in his address, said, "We have found Washington to be as important to our future as Hollywood" and reminded that "our relations with the government have not been good."

"We have confused the Department of Justice with contradicting demands," he said. "We have failed to present a united, unified position." He voiced the hope that "through the united voice of ACE we will now get a sympathetic hearing from the Department of Justice." In discussing ACE, Kerasotes said that "exhibition had to unite for self-preservation" and pointed out that ACE "will attempt to avoid duplication of work done by existing organizations."

The TOA head said he "seriously believed" that the producers and distributors would sell their post-1948 films to TV now if it were not for the demands of the various guilds in Hollywood. Kerasotes declared that "as producers and distributors do not own any theatres now, they can afford to gamble, mainly because of this lack of financial interest in theatres and because of the diversification of their corporate structures which have brought other sources of income."

Indicating that the proposed meeting of representatives of ACE and the heads of distribution would take place "momentarily," Kerasotes reported that ACE is making progress in areas vital to the survival of a large-scale exhibition industry and a prosperous

Colonial Bank Of N.Y. Finances 10 For AIP

HOLLYWOOD—Marking further growth in status and stability, five-year-old American International Pictures is completing arrangements with the Colonial Bank of New York for financing of 10 feature motion pictures to be made within the next year, it is announced by James H. Nicholson and Samuel Z. Arkoff.

Financing for the additional 14 to 20 films to be filmed in the next year by AIP will be by Pathe Laboratories, which has been a principal source in the past, Nicholson and Arkoff said.

AIP intends to maintain its present pace of 24-30 features annually, Nicholson and Arkoff reported.

The 10 AIP features, three in color, to be produced with Colonial Bank financing are "Diary of a High School Bride," "Drag Race," "The Haunted House of Usher" (in color and based on Edgar Allan Poe's "Fall of the House of Usher"), "End of the World," "World Without Women," "Bombs Away," "Blood Hill," "Take Me to Your Leader," "She" (in color and based on H. Rider Haggard's novel), and "Eve and the Dragon" (in color).

Film Importers Unit Set

NEW YORK—Steps were taken last fortnight by the independent importers and distributors of foreign films to form a new organization for their mutual benefit and protection.

Richard Brandt was appointed temporary chairman of the group.

Several organizational committees were named and include Edward Kingsley, Frank Kassler, Munio Podhorzer, Jack Ellis, Max Goldberg, Bordon Mace, and Sanford Weiner.

The next meeting is tentatively set for the end of May.

movie industry. He recommended that exhibitors "buy stock as an equity in the film companies."

In connection with efforts to include theatres in the provisions of the Minimum Wage Law, Kerasotes warned that "thousands of theatres would undoubtedly have to shut if they had to pay their ushers, doormen, cashiers, and candy attendants $1.25 per hour."

Theatres File Pledges For "Oscar" Support

NEW YORK—Formal pledges of participation in the Oscar telecast promotion already have been received from approximately 1,000 theatres, Charles E. McCarthy, COMPO information director, reported last week.

"Judging from the number of promotion kits ordered by exhibitors who have not yet sent in their pledge cards, and the extensive promotion plans announced by several of the large circuits which also have not sent in their signed pledges, this is only a small percentage of the actual number of theatres already at work on the promotion," McCarthy said.

"While we are naturally more interested in the promotion itself than in the receipt of pledge cards, we would appreciate being notified by all participating theatres so that we may obtain a reasonably accurate account of the number of theatres engaged."

Sam Horwitz, publicity director of the Interboro Circuit, reported that Academy Award kits had been supplied to all its theatres, plus a list of suggestions for promoting the telecast. He added that the circuit has ordered a tag trailer to be attached to the Red Buttons trailer, announcing that the main feature in the circuit's theatres would start at 8:30 on Academy Award night, so that patrons may get home in time to view the Oscar award ceremonies.

Henry E. Capogna, publicity director for the W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Michigan, also reported that 60 kits had been ordered for its theatres and that a full scale promotion is under way, with good local newspaper support. These are typical of many such efforts.

Red Buttons trailers for the telecast have been made available in 16mm for all TV stations which will use them. Rush orders for the 16mm prints already have been received by COMPO from TV stations in St. Paul, Minn.; Dayton, Columbus, and Cincinnati, O.; Traverse City, Lansing, Bay City, Grand Rapids, and Jackson, Mich.; Youngstown, O.; Petersburg, Richmond, and Hampton, Va.

Para. Promotes Two

NEW YORK—Two Paramount branch managerial appointments were announced last week by Sidney G. Deneau, vice-president, Paramount Film Distributing Corporation.

Arnold Shartin, Salt Lake City branch manager, on May 4 will become Los Angeles branch manager, succeeding Alfred R. Taylor who, as previously announced, will assume supervision of Paramount's mid-western division. J. Harold Stevens, who died in Chicago, had been manager of the mid-western division comprising the Chicago, Detroit, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, and Minneapolis branches. Taylor's headquarters will be in Chicago.

W. Donald Foster, Kansas City branch sales manager, has been promoted, effective April 13, to Salt Lake City branch manager.

Senate Okays Balto. Censors

ANNAPOLIS, MD.—The Maryland State Senate last fortnight approved a measure giving the Board of Motion Picture Censors the right to bar the showing of certain films to children from six to 16 years of age in Baltimore City.

The Senate also passed on a state-wide basis a measure which would make it a misdemeanor to show an "obscene" film.

NTA Stock Exchange Plan Now Effective

LOS ANGELES—B. Gerald Cantor, chairman of the board, and John B. Bertero, president, National Theatres, Inc., announced last week that the exchange offer to National Telefilm Associates, Inc., stockholders and warrant holders has been declared effective. Pursuant to this exchange, accepting NTA stockholders will receive for each share of NTA common stock $11 principal amount of 5½ per cent Sinking Fund Subordinated Debentures due March 1, 1974, and a warrant for the purchase of one-quarter of one share of National Theatres common stock. The exchange of NTA warrants is on an equivalent basis.

Up to the close of business on March 20, 1959, the holders of 846,962 shares of NTA stock, representing 75 per cent of the shares outstanding, and the holders of 182,135 NTA warrants, representing 39 per cent of the warrants outstanding, had accepted the offer.

Trading of the Debentures on the American Stock Exchange was to begin on approximately April 1. Interest on the Debentures will accrue from March 16, 1959.

The present offer to NTA stockholders and warrant holders expires April 6.

MBS Changes Hands

NEW YORK—Mutual Broadcasting System, subsidiary of Scranton Corporation, was sold last fortnight for an undisclosed amount to a group of businessmen headed by Malcolm E. Smith, Jr., and Richard H. Davimos.

The Hal Roach Studios, another Scranton subsidiary in the F. L. Jacobs setup, may also have a possible buyer, with Ivan T. Smith, Los Angeles realtor, said to represent an interested group.

Magna Execs Tour For "S.P."

NEW YORK—Joseph M. Sugar, Magna vice-president in charge of sales, and Martin J. Sweeny, Jr., who has been in charge of sales for the Todd-AO version of "South Pacific," left last week for a two week tour.

The purpose of the trip is to meet and confer with leading exhibitors and 20th-Fox's exchange staff. Sugar and Sweeny will discuss plans for the general release and distribution of "South Pacific" in the 35mm version.

AB-PT Ups Praught To Head UDT; Allen To Manage Tri-State Group

Court Rules "Adults Only" Law In Chi Unconstitutional

CHICAGO—In a decision handed down last week in the U. S. District Court, it was found that the section of the Motion Picture Code which states that 21 years is a dividing point between children and adults is unconstitutional.

Judge Sullivan, according to his ruling, states that that section which authorizes the exhibition of certain motion pictures only to persons over the age of 21 is unconstitutional on the ground that its language is not definite and clear, and is an insufficient guide to censors or those who produce motion pictures. In addition, the age of 21 as a dividing line is not reasonable or appropriate to separate "children" from adults.

This portion of the Code was contested for Paramount by attorney, Samuel W. Block, when the Police Censor Board refused to grant a general permit for the picture "Desire Under The Elms."

New UA Post To Kesten

NEW YORK—Steve Kesten has been appointed to the newly-created post of assistant New York newspaper contact for United Artists, it was announced by Roger H. Lewis, national director of advertising, publicity, and exploitation. Kesten joined UA's exploitation department in November, 1957. He is replaced by William Schneider. Kesten will now be a member of the publicity department headed by Mort Nathanson.

N. Y. License Fee Bill

ALBANY, N. Y.—The State Senate last fortnight passed and sent to the assembly a bill which will increase the license fees collected by the Motion Picture Division from $3 to $4 for each 1,000 feet or fraction of original film and from $2 to $4 for each addition entire copy of original film for which a license or permit has been issued.

DETROIT—Woodrow R. Praught has been named president of United Detroit Theatres Corporation, succeeding Harold H. Brown who died Feb. 22 in Hollywood. The appointment was announced by Leonard H. Goldenson, president, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., of New York, parent company of the Detroit theatre group which operates 14 theatres in metropolitan Detroit. Edward L. Hyman, vice-president of AB-PT, was in town to install Praught.

Since 1957, Praught has been vice-president and co-general manager of Tri-States Theatre Corporation of Des Moines, another subsidiary of AB-PT.

Prior to that, he had spent over 25 years in theatre business with Minnesota Amusement Company, another affiliated theatre chain operating in the northern states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin. His theatre career started when he undertook his first job as a part-time usher in Duluth, Minn., and through the years progressed into various assignments in theatre management, advertising, and supervision. Before his assignment in Des Moines, he had been in Minneapolis as a district manager.

The announcement of Praught's appointment was coupled with that of the advancement of A. Don Allen of Des Moines to general managership of Tri-States Theatres Corporation. Allen and Praught have been joint heads of Tri-States since the retirement from active management in 1957 of A. H. Blank, founder of the midwest theatre circuit. Allen assumes his post after nearly 30 years of service with Tri-States in various capacities.

United Detroit Theatres operates the Michigan, Madison, Palms, and Broadway-Capitol Theatres in downtown Detroit, and the Fisher, Cinderella, Woods, Norwest, Varsity, Vogue, Ramona, Birmingham, Bloomfield, and Mel in neighborhood sections throughout the metropolitan Detroit area. In addition, United Detroit also operates the Northio Circuit, including six theatres in northern Ohio and one in Danville, Ky.

List, Glen Alden Merger Pending Subject To Stockholder Approval

NEW YORK—It was learned last fortnight that RKO Theatres will become a Glen Alden subsidiary in connection with the pending merger of List Industries and Glen Alden Corporation.

The 39 per cent interest which Gera Corporation, a List subsidiary, acquired last year in Glen Alden for $8,719,109 cash, since has been transferred to RKO Theatres, Inc., according to the proxy statement furnished stockholders.

Conversion of the Glen Alden shares on a one and one-fourth ratio called for in the merger plan will require the issuance of 437,158 additional shares of Glen Alden common, which include 170,943 shares to be issued to RKO Theatres.

Conversion of the shares of List common now outstanding, excluding treasury shares, on the basis of one share of Glen Alden for one of List will require the issuance of 4,366,443 Glen Alden shares, which include 138,584 shares to be issued in conversion of the List shares held by Gera, which will become a Glen Alden subsidiary.

As a result, of the 5,558,934 Glen Alden common to be outstanding after the merger, excluding treasury shares and shares held by subsidiaries, former Glen Alden shareholders other than RKO Theatres will hold about 24 per cent of the shares of Glen Alden as the combined enterprise instead of the 61 per cent presently held in Glen Alden, and former List shareholders will hold about 76 per cent of the shares of the combination, instead of their 39 per cent interest in Glen Alden, via RKO Theatres, and their 100 per cent interest in List.

After the merger, Glen Alden will have 1,732,166 shares of its common available for future issuance, excluding shares allocable to stock option plans.

All present List directors are slated for election to the Glen Alden board upon the merger, thus giving the List interests a substantial majority.

List directors with their families and a List family foundation beneficially own more than half of the stock of List. After the merger, the Albert A. List family group and the foundation will own approximately 37 per cent of Glen Alden.

The merger move, which failed last year, would have changed the name of the combination to List Alden Corporation. The Glen Alden Corporation now will be the surviving corporation.

Albert A. List purchased control of RKO Theatres Corporation in 1953, and changed the name of that company to List Industries Corporation. In 1956, upon RKO's purchase of the Cleveland Arcade Company from List, members of his family, and trusts for their benefit, RKO Theatres, Inc., was formed as a List subsidiary.

RKO Theatres, it is stated, had a gross income of $24,830,142, and operating income of $1,688,046 for 1958. The number of theatres operated during the year was 63, with admissions placed at 25,158,885.

The proxy statement notes that RKO Theatres is actively negotiating for the sale of five properties with provision for the lease back of theatres. An option involving another house and related hotel expires on March 31.

Albert A. List, the dominant stockholder in List Industries Corporation, will become

License Bill Amended

WILMINGTON, DEL. — Mayor Eugene Lamot signed into law 22 amendments to the business license fee law passed by City Council. One of the amendments extends from April 30 to June 30, the deadline for the first quarterly employee tax payment reported in MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR on March 11.

Another provides that members of boards of directors are not to be considered employees when calculating the $1 per month employee fee unless their salaries are subject to the provisions of the social security and/or federal or state unemployment insurance laws.

Most of the amendments to the business license are minor and involve mere changes in wording.

Marines Honor Exhibs

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.—R. J. (Bob) Chapman, city manager, Rowley United's Corpus Christi Theatres, and Ed Farmer, manager, Gulf Drive-In and Ayres theatre, were presented with citations and Marine Corps Iwo Jima statuettes for community services at a Lion's Club luncheon last fortnight.

The citations were written by Colonel W. H. Stephens, director, U.S. Marine Corps, New Orleans, Headquarters Eighth Naval District, and were presented by Colonel Ralph E. Lewis, inspector instructor, U.S. Marine Corps, First Rec. Battalion, Corpus Christi.

president of Glen Alden Corporation, in the event the stockholders of both List and Glen Alden approve the proposed merger, in which Glen Alden would be the surviving corporation.

The merger agreement was approved by the List and Glen Alden boards earlier this month.

Voting on the merger will take place at the List annual meeting on April 10 at the Wellington Hotel, while shareholders of Glen Alden are to meet April 21 at the Sterling Hotel, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

The combined assets of the merged corporation would be over $132,000,000, and it would have outstanding over five million shares. Application has been made to list the shares on the New York Stock Exchange.

UA's Rothman To N.Y. In Overseas Changes

NEW YORK—Arnold M. Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution, last week announced a series of key appointments involving the company's operations at the home office and overseas.

Mo Rothman, presently continental manager in Paris, will come to New York to join the foreign department executive staff and will be a member of the team consisting of Louis Lober, general manager of the foreign department, and Alfred Katz, division manager for Latin America, the Far East, and Australasia.

John Lefebvre has been appointed to succeed Rothman as continental manager. A newcomer to UA from 20th-Fox, where he served in a similar capacity, Lefebvre will join the company on May 15.

Eric Pleskow, formerly manager in Germany and more recently assistant to Rothman, has been named assistant continental manager.

Giulio Ascarelli, veteran film publicist, has been appointed director of advertising, publicity and exploitation for continental Europe and the Middle East, effective May 2. He formerly held a similar post with 20th Century-Fox. Mrs. Kato Fenton-Dormer will serve as Ascarelli's assistant.

Rounding out the new appointments, George Ornstein, who is UA's representative in Spain, will assume additional duties as vice-president Charles Smadja's assistant for production matters in Spain.

Rank Records Names G. M.

NEW YORK—The Rank Organization announced last week that Norman Wienstroer has been appointed as general manager of its American record operation. Wienstroer has been with Decca Records since 1945, and for the last nine years has been general sales manager for Coral and Brunswick Records.

The Rank American record operation will operate as a division of Rank Film Distributors of America, Inc. from its present address, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York 19, and Wienstroer will be appointed a vice-president of that Company.

Arthur Patterson, currently with Rank Film Distributors of America, Inc., will be appointed treasurer of the Company.

NEW YORK—Alfred H. Tamarin has been appointed to head the special worldwide publicity unit handling Samuel Goldwyn's forthcoming "Porgy and Bess," it was announced last week by Paul N. Lazarus, Jr., vice-president of Columbia, through which the George Gershwin-DuBose Heyward film will be released.

Tamarin most recently served with United Artists as assistant national director of advertising, publicity, and exploitation, and as vice-president of UA's record and music division.

Sanders Joins UMPO

He formerly operated exchanges in Atlanta, Miami, and New York, and is a pioneer in the field of foreign film distribution.

Hollywood on Location: Everybody's An Actor

DETROIT—Here's the order of events which places the Upper Peninsula towns of Ishpeming and Marquette more in the State of Up-roar than of Michigan:

1) A Michigan Supreme Court Justice using the pen name of Robert Traver wrote a novel which became the best-seller, "Anatomy of Murder," with the Upper Peninsula as its setting.

2) Otto Preminger decided to produce and direct the movie to be made from it in the authentic surroundings.

3) About a month ago, casting director Max Slater and technicians began to arrive.

4) It was made known that about 150 local citizens would be employed as extras, for walk-ons, and minor roles.

5) As a gesture of good will, City Manager George T. Meholick, Jr. offered the City Hall as casting office for those who had registered for the $10 per day jobs in the two towns.

6) City Hall business was completely halted when police had to break up the storming crowd.

7) Meholick withdrew the offer.

8) The towns went movie-crazy when they beheld the new neighbors who were moving in for awhile. They included Eve Arden, Kathy Crosby, Detroit-born Ben Gazzara, Lee Remick, George C. Scott, and James Stewart. There was also a prominent Boston lawyer, Joseph W. Welch, whom Preminger had persuaded to try acting as the Judge in the case.

9) Shooting began in the court house refurbished according to the ideas of the Hollywood set decorators. Natives hardly recognized the place.

10) There was tremendous competition for the minor parts. One who tried out for the role of the murder victim and failed to get the part was heard to snort derisively at the successful aspirant, "Huh! All he's got to do is to drop dead."

11) Less emotional and movie-bug-bitten, but quite happy about the whole thing are Marquette and Ishpeming business men. Preminger's unit it is estimated, will spend about $300,000 cold cash in the vicinity before the Upper Peninsula's days of glory are over.

"Anatomy" Dates Set Before Cameras Turn

NEW YORK—The first datings of a motion picture that went before the cameras the next day were announced last fortnight in seven local newspapers and two Los Angeles papers. The three column ads announced that Columbia's "Anatomy Of A Murder" had been booked into the Criterion, New York, and the SW Warner, Beverly Hills, Cal., and was placed by Donahue and Coe, Columbia's advertising agency, in preferred space away from the amusement pages.

This is believed to be the first time such advance showing ads were used. The film went on location at Ishpeming, Mich.

Fox Earnings Soar

NEW YORK—Twentieth Century-Fox last week reported consolidated earnings of $7,-582,357 for the year ended Dec. 27, 1958. This amounted to $3.30 per common share outstanding as compared with earnings for 1957 of $6,511,218, or $2.49 per share.

The earnings for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 27, 1958, amounted to $991,366 or $.43 per share, compared with $887,360 or $.36 per share for the fourth quarter of 1957.

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecuff

THAT'S SHOW BIZ: Over 1,000 exhibitors, press representatives, and guests gathered in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf Astoria to be "Hercularized" by Joe Levine and associates in Embassy Pictures. Under these auspices, the campaign for the forthcoming release of "Hercules," now to be distributed under the Warners banner, were unveiled and pounded home in more than forceful fashion.

Levine was praised and applauded for bringing back the old razzmatazz of show business by such people as Sam Rosen of Stanley Warner Theatres; by Italian producer Lionello Santi, who made "Hercules" in Rome; by Pietro Francisci, the film's director; by Sol Schwartz, president of RKO Theatres; and by Charles Boasberg, Warners general sales manager, who reported over 2,000 bookings in already for the month of July.

Levine credited the decorations and other facets of the luncheon to his wife. There was music, cocktails, a fine meal, models in ancient robes passing out pressbooks, Vaughn Monroe to personally sing his recording of a song based on the title. In addition, a series of theatre and TV trailers were presented at the conclusion of the luncheon. Sumner Redstone, toastmaster, kept the proceedings moving at a fine pace.

Among those who plugged the campaign from the dais were Larry Hanson of Look Magazine; William Falk of Life; Mrs. Helen Meyer of Dell; Harry Meyers of American Weekly; Edward Kimball of Parents; and James Barry of WRCA-TV. TV saturation as well as other media will be represented on the full schedule that has been lined up by Sid Blumenstock, who is in charge of advertising and publicity for Embassy Pictures.

"Hercules" will be exploded before and during July, so watch out for the fireworks, sez we.

VIVE LA FRANCE: Columbia Pictures acted as host at a press luncheon in its executive dining suite for French producer Raoul Levy and French director-writer Henri-Georges Clouzot, and it was announced that negotiations were under way with the pair for some future product to be made in France for Columbia release.

Levy, who produced "And God Created Woman" with Brigitte Bardot, reported that the first film will probably be "Verite" (The Truth), which will also star Bardot and will roll in December in Paris. This would be the first of a multiple picture deal which would amount almost to a continuation of a pact that he had with the company in the past. Clouzot will write and produce this film.

Levy is to deliver shortly "San Francisco Regatta" and "Babbette Goes to War," which also stars Bardot. He had already delivered "The Night Heaven Fell" and the soon-to-be released "In Case of Emergency." His deal is expected to run for three years and will call for up to three films to be delivered to Columbia.

Clouzot would like to make a picture in Hollywood if he finds the proper story, or one in New York if the novel he saw can be obtained. He is known for "Diabolique" and "Wages of Fear," both of which did well here. The former, he revealed, was made as a "joke," and he hated it. He hopes he can find another "joke" which he can hate similarly. He noted you don't have to undress Bardot to make her sexy; nonetheless, she will be unclothed in his next picture.

Levy noted that the French producer is condemned to make money or to go to jail. If the picture is a success, he winds up in the former category; if not, he goes into the latter because he can't pay his production costs.

THE METROPOLITAN SCENE: Ernie Emerling, one of Loew's newest and most versatile vice-presidents, sends along a carpet chain letter wherein a sample of the carpet currently being installed in the new Loew's State is enclosed. It's pretty good looking, and the thought occurs that if we can contact enough of our colleagues and make a deal for their samples, we might emerge with a rug of sorts. . . . Good old Marty Blau is the new assistant publicity manager. WHY NOT? He's a good man. Good old "Bud" Rosenthal moves from the lowly trade press to the job as trade press contact, replacing good old Marty Blau. . . . The campaign for UA's "Shake Hands With the Devil" got a lift via a "Devil's Shake Cocktail Kit" which contained nips of Irish whiskey and Curacao, which when mixed in shertain fashion is mosh refreshin, hic. . . . Lana Turner was to release a cluster of balloons from in front of the Roxy with passes, tickets, etc., contained therein for the showing of "Imitation of Life," which is to play that emporium next. Incidentally, a special screening of the film was held for 500 representatives of women's organizations at the Paris Theatre last week, which is part of the overall national promotional campaign. . . . Easter Sunday saw Omnibus devote its program to a part of the forthcoming UN feature, "Power Among Men," which should create a "want-to-see" appetite among viewers for when it's released in full version form in theatres. . . . Railroads are cooperating handsomely by posting car cards gratis plugging the Oscar telecast. Joe Gould of UA, Lloyd Seidman of Donohue and Coe, and Julie Bass also of the latter are responsible for this cost-free promotion, while NBC printed the cards.

Thalberg Award To Warner

HOLLYWOOD—It was announced by the Academy board of governors last week that Jack L. Warner will receive the Irving G. Thalberg Award by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at its 31st annual awards presentations on April 6.

The Award is bestowed to producers deemed to have been responsible for the most consistent high quality of production in the year under consideration.

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.—George G. Hattem, Irving Hattem, and Morton Sanders have reopened the Beacon.

The 600-seat house has been completely refurbished. The Hattens and Sanders operate theatre concessions and now have 12 theatres. Jack Hattem, pioneer industryite who is currently with the Interboro Circuit as head film buyer, is the father of the Hattem boys.

Heineman reported that signers of contracts for "Some Like It Hot" were notified that the contract was signed with no reservation clauses, and if there were such clauses, that they were null and void. He stated that there were no set terms demanded on the picture and that all deals were not alike but were rather dependent on exhibitor ability to pay. That amount UA wants him to pay, Heineman stressed.

UA executives have canvassed the producer-members of the company, and all the top ones have indicated firm support for the announced policy. Said Schaefer, "This is getting back to the normal way of doing business."

He reasoned that 80 per cent of the theatres in the country have already written off their cost, and the producers these days are making an investment equal to the erection of a new theatre, but they can't write off their cost. If the contracts are not there and are not honored, it would be just a short time, he opined, before the banks would refuse to extend producers money to make pictures. They lend money on the strength of exhibitor contracts. If these are not valid, then the security can be deemed insufficient.

Heineman, incidentally, reported that UA has no connection with the distribution plans of the Lopert Company with regard to their recently acquired product from the Rank Organization. They have complete autonomy, although Lopert may be utilizing some desk space for sales people in a few of the UA exchanges. He expected that they would probably expand the staff to handle the increase in the films distributed. Heineman believed that some 40-odd films were involved in the transaction, but not all of them would be sold to theatres, some already having received a measure of exhibition.

Vice-President Richard Nixon recently received a life-time membership card in Variety Club Tent 11 of Washington, D.C., from Chief Barker Frank Boucher, who is manager of the Washington-Baltimore edition of TV Guide magazine.

Foreign Critics "Defiant"

NEW YORK—Stanley Kramer's "The Defiant Ones," the year's most honored motion picture, has been selected as the best picture of 1958 by the New York Foreign Language Film Critics. The citation was to be presented at ceremonies held at the Municipal Building, Manhattan, March 30.

Ohio Blue Laws Stir Legislative Differences

COLUMBUS, O.—Ohio theatres would be darkened between 2:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Sundays if House Bill 300, introduced by Rep. Louis J. Schneider, Republican, Hamilton County, is approved.

The Schneider bill prohibits business activity, sports, and amusements during that period. Exempt are restaurants, transportation, and religious services.

House Bill 141, introduced by Rep. Paul Lynch, Columbus Democrat, exempts amusements from the Sunday closing law. The Lynch bill exempts sale of drugs, meals, non-alcoholic beverages and 3.2 beer, newspapers, milk, gasoline, commercial trucking, sports and amusements.

Repeal of Ohio's 128-year-old "blue law" is proposed in bills submitted by Sen. Anthony Calabrese, Cleveland Democrat, and Rep. Robert Taft, Jr., Cincinnati Republican. The law prohibits employment of persons over 14 in "common labor" on Sundays. Exempt is "work of charity or necessity" and does not extend to those who "conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the sabbath and abstain thereon from doing things prohibited on Sunday." The ancient law does not exempt amusements, but theatres have operated on Sundays for many years without interference.

In recent weeks, Mayor M. E. Sensenbrenner of Columbus has ordered enforcement of the blue laws, aimed especially at suburban department stores, auto repair garages, and other commercial establishments.

Court Denies Orbo Appeal

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The Supreme Court last fortnight let stand a lower court ruling dismissing the complaint by the Orbo Theatre Corporation, which operates the Villa, Rockville, Md.

The corporation had complained that the 21-day clearance required by Loew's, et al, in downtown Washington, violated restraint of trade provisions of antitrust laws, and had sought an injunction and triple damages.

Allied Artists Optimistic Thanks To Prospects Of Profitable Year

NEW YORK—Steve Broidy, president, Allied Artists, announced last week at a press conference that according to the way company income was proceeding at present, the company would probably wind up well in the black by the end of its fiscal year on June 30. This would mark the first profitable year of the last three, having lost $1,180,000 last year and over $2,000,000 the year before. Much of the credit for the upsurge is attributed to "House on Haunted Hill" and the recently-released "Al Capone," which are proving top grossers for AA.

Broidy and vice-president in charge of sales Maurice "Razz" Goldstein reported that exhibitor reaction was heartening, which was an incentive to go ahead with the program of producing at least six of the larger and more expensive films during the next year, plus at least 10 others, as well as 10 from outside sources. He hoped exhibitors won't permit the smaller pictures to get lost in the shuffle because if monies on these are held up it may limit the production of the bigger pictures. Exhibitor cooperation has been wonderful, it was said, and if it continues, exhibitors will be in for a "pleasant surprise."

Several of the larger films named were "The Big Circus," which cost $1,800,000, has been completed, and will be released in July, possibly on a roadshow basis. Sandy Abrahams, newly-named advertising and publicity director, was introduced to the assembled press and noted that the film will be sold like a circus instead of a film. It will probably have the largest advertising, promotion, and exploitation campaign in the history of the company.

Also scheduled for the bigger treatment are "Man of Montmartre" and "79 Park Avenue."

Broidy stated that the company's decision to seek diversification of interests has been on the agenda for some time, and while proposals were made to the company, none were up to the pattern of operation. The company is seeking additional operations in order to level out the profit factor on a steady basis, while picture returns are always subject to fluctuation.

Broidy commented, "We think we have a patent for our own company which we hope will prove successful, and we are thankful for exhibitor cooperation which is a continuing necessity if we are to continue to grow. We believe theatres are here to stay."

Goldstein, who took a trip a few months ago to ask exhibitors to give some attention, encouragement, and protection to their source of supply was greatly heartened by response everywhere. Exhibitors, said he, by helping us liquidate our pictures are helping themselves as well.

Industry Honors Va. Editor

RICHMOND, VA.—Edith Lindman, motion picture and drama editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch for the past 25 years, was feted by friends in the entertainment and newspaper fields, at the historic Hanover Tavern, Hanover Court House, Virginia, present home of the Barksdale Players.

Among those present were song writer Johnny Mercer; Oscar A. Doob of MGM; Ernie Emerling, Orville Crouch, and Jack Foxe of Loew's Theatres; and Morton Thalheimer, Sr., Richmond real estate and theatre operator.

Fellowship Commission Fetes Film Luminaries

PHILADELPHIA—Hollywood will be the guest of honor at a night of its own when the motion picture industry and its stars come here on April 18 to receive the annual National Fellowship award of the Philadelphia Fellowship Commission.

George Stevens, Charlton Heston, Sidney Poitier, Millie Perkins, and Jackie Robinson will be among the personalities who will come here to represent the industry, which will be honored at the Award Dinner to be held in the Broadwood Hotel.

This year's National Fellowship Award will be given to the film industry for its production of many sensitive and forthright feature films over the year that have contributed notably to the improvement of intergroup relations and the promotion of racial and religious understanding.

Stevens and Miss Perkins will be honored for "The Diary Of Anne Frank"; Poitier for "The Defiant Ones"; Heston for his portrayal of Moses in "The Ten Commandments"; and Robinson for "The Jackie Robinson Story."

Filmack Reissues "Courtesy"

CHICAGO—One of the most effective films ever produced by the Filmack Trailer Company is now being reissued for use by exhibitors on a rental basis.

The film, "Courtesy Is Contagious," was designed to be both entertaining and instructive. Filmed in an actual theatre with live actors, it demonstrates proper service methods to cashiers, doormen, concession stand attendants, ushers, janitors and managers. The film runs about 17 minutes.

Filmack President Irving Mack explains that "for years, the training of new ushers has been left to old ushers. . . or new cashiers were trained by old cashiers. No experienced executive has had the time to devote to training a staff that changes as often as the theatre staff of today. This film will train new employees and serve as a refresher course for the more experienced help."

UJA To Honor Krim

NEW YORK—It was announced last fortnight that Irving H. Greenfield, secretary, Loew's, Inc., will serve another term as chairman of the United Jewish Appeal campaign in the motion picture and amusement industry.

The guest of honor for the industry's 1959 UJA luncheon to be held May 27 in the Park Lane Hotel will be United Artists' president Arthur B. Krim.

Greenfield reported that over $683,000 was raised last year for UJA's regular campaign and the special emergency fund for refugees.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

WHAT A JOY it is to write about events which reflect enthusiasm for motion pictures and confidence in future. Though it meant rising at 6 a.m. on both Saturday and Sunday mornings, the trip to Preston in the north west for the opening of the new ABC was more than worthwhile.

Built on the site of the Theatre Royal which opened in 1803 and was closed about two years ago, the new house seats 1,500 and is revolutionary in every way.

It is the first theatre in the world to install the Philips FP 208 projector with the SPP Discharge Lamp. This miniature version of the mercury lamps used for street lighting consumes only 800 watts and is about the size of a clinical thermometer. The light comes from the centre part of the tube, only three quarters of an inch in length, with its own built in miniature mirror, yet can illuminate CinemaScope pictures.

The lamp is not continuously alight and a spare lamp automatically replaces a failing or used one. Current is supplied to it in brief pulses 72 times a second, by means of special circuits triggered by the projector mechanism. This means the lamp is pulsed three times for every picture frame and the film moves down during every third blackout period. This results in the elimination of the rotating shutter, light being used more efficiently, and, due to the higher pulsing rate, a picture free from visible flicker. The cost is estimated to be 55 per cent of the normal carbon rate. The booth looks slightly strange. The dominant features of the projectors are now the spool boxes; the lamp house is about the size of a telephone.

The opening was one of the best and smoothest I have attended and it is in truth and not courtesy to my hosts that I borrow the cliché about everything going without a hitch. Richard Todd, in introducing the Mayor, once again revealed how fortunate the British film industry is in having actors who can taper box office appeal with a presence, thorough knowledge of the industry, and business acumen that deeply impress the general public and dispell popular notions about stars. He registers as a man and reveals that he would be prominent in any walk of life.

The evening opened with a civic reception and closed with a private ABC party for those who had made the theatre possible and the trade press. It was completely informal, and in talking with the boys, managing director Jack Goodlatte spoke really from the heart in expressing his pride and gratitude for the wonderful theatre and a grand opening. Ably assisting him was his fellow director, Bill Cartlidge. For my part, it was the most enjoyable week-end in a long while.

Three Face Sentence In Embezzlement Case

HARTFORD, CONN. — Details behind a $15,000 embezzlement at the Meadows Drive-In here were disclosed last fortnight in Superior Court as the theatre's former manager and two young girl cashiers were presented on embezzlement charges.

Joseph Bresnahan, the former manager, pleaded nolo contendere (no contest) to two charges of embezzlement by agent and one count of obtaining money by false pretenses. The girls pleaded guilty to charges of accessory to embezzlement. Bresnahan faces a maximum of 23 years in prison, and the girls could receive 10 years each.

It was testified that last fall, the owners of the drive-in became suspicious of wrongdoing because of the drop in receipts. As a test of this suspicion, four adults were sent into the theatre in one car. The driver asked for four tickets and paid for them. Only two tickets were punched on the register and the car was waved inside. A subsequent investigation disclosed that in addition to this practice, women on duty in ticket booth would pocket the entire payment when no change was required. In other cases, free admission passes were substituted for paid admissions.

Some $15,000 was embezzled in this manner, it was testified. In addition, Bresnahan was said to have made out payroll checks to non-existent "employees" and forged their endorsements to cash the checks. Also, it was said that $640 collected for the Jimmy Fund was never turned over to the fund.

After the investigation started, Bresnahan and the others fled the state but later gave themselves up.

U-I Toppers Preside At Latin-American Meets

NEW YORK—Universal president Milton R. Rackmil, accompanied by vice-president and foreign general manager Americo Aboaf, left last week to preside at three Latin American meetings.

At three conferences, Jamaica, from March 25 to 29, in Rio de Janeiro, from March 31 to April 4; and Buenos Aires, from April 5 to 9, the U-I toppers were to meet with key U-I executives and leading exhibitors to outline the company's future production plans and operating policies.

SERVICE SECTION

THE CHECK-UP of all Features and Short Subjects as reviewed and compiled during the past 12 months

Published every second week, as a separately bound and easily saveable section of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, this exclusive 24 year old service lists by (1) Distribution Source and by (2) Alphabet, all professional motion pictures offered for dating by the nation's theatres, plus all those that are in production. Each new issue is a complete, carefully checked reference index, brought up-to-date from the best available sources. Complete and detailed REVIEWS are published as separately bound and easily saveable pink paper sections, on the alternating every second week throughout the film season (September to September), and are cumulatively numbered. It is recommended that readers save this SERVICE SECTION reference for only the two week interval between issues, and then discard it as antiquated data. The pink paper REVIEWS, however, should be permanently saved and assembled into complete files, by seasons, and the last issue of each August will always contain a complete annual index.

Combined, the yellow paper SERVICE SECTION and the pink paper REVIEWS represent a unique informative service to theatremen that is unequalled in either accuracy or completeness.

Please address all inquiries or suggestions about these two service features to the Editors of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, 246-48 N. Clarion St., Philadelphia 7, Penna.

EDITORIAL FOREWORD

As the 1959 THEATRE CATALOG Edition goes to press, the outlook for motion picture theatres and the industry in general throughout the world is a brighter one than we have been able to anticipate for several years. There are a number of very good reasons for this.

To begin with, activity in the field of design, construction, and interior work has been imaginative and vigorous in recent months, both in the United States and overseas. New trends are evidence of some responsible and hard thinking on the part of architects, manufacturers, theatremen, and everyone else allied in a common effort to make the theatre the world's most obvious place to look for entertainment. There is an abundance of new ideas about what the theatre of the future can and should be, about where it can and should be, and about the role it should play in the day-to-day life of the moviegoing public.

In the field of projection and sound, the outlook is just as encouraging. After a period of readjustment following the rapid developments of the early years of this decade, it seems certain that we are ready to move ahead again and that theatremen everywhere seek means to improve film presentation. Renewed interest in stereophonic sound has manifested itself and, equally important, there is a move underway to 70mm film. It seems very probable, if not certain, that 70mm is destined to become the standard of the industry in the years that lie ahead, and manufacturers and suppliers already are offering excellent equipment to launch this era. In the equipment end of the industry, this can be considered the most important and significant recent development.

While the foregoing remarks apply primarily to the conventional theatre, let us not overlook the drive-in, no longer the remarkable baby of exhibition, but a lusty adult. Outdoor theatre construction, expansion, and improvements continue on every front and, as it has been observed before, the future for this kind of film presentation is just about unlimited. Because drive-in movie-going is, essentially, a different experience from that in the roofed theatre, the two can no longer be considered truly competitive. Drive-ins are, therefore, entitled to grow independently of, and differently from, their brothers. At the same time, the more radical the difference between the two, the more peaceful will be their coexistence. While it cannot be denied that a competitive situation exists still between the two kinds of theatres in many localities, the more they grow different from each other, the less that competition will be, and the more each will flourish.

It is appropriate to note also that the theatre's most important adjunct—the refreshment stand—is enjoying the best health of its life. Legion products, equipment, and supplies for this facility permit the theatremen to build a structure of extra profits precisely according to his needs and inclinations and thereby to insure ever better economic health for his theatre.

In surveying today's scene and in attempting to catch a glimpse of what may lie just over the horizon, we must also recognize the role of motion picture production in bringing about current and projected states of affairs. While the theatre itself is the only suitable outlet for the industry's product, it must rely on the creative and practical abilities of producers, directors, engineers, actors, craftsmen, and many others to supply it with much needed product.

In the pages that follow, we hope that you, the reader, will recognize our theme: quality theatres, and quality equipment, and quality presentation mean a great tomorrow.

Theatre Construction Today and Tomorrow

The Central Problem in the Design and Construction of Theatres Is to Achieve Film Projection which is Dramatically Different

The Heart Of The Problem

■ IN THE CONTEMPORARY DESIGN and construction of motion picture theatres, it has become increasingly evident that the exhibitor, designers, suppliers, and various other collaborators frequently lose sight of the fact that the primary consideration influencing the final shape of the theatre is, very simply, picture projection. When confronted by some new, elaborate, and very expensive roofed houses, it is often difficult for this observer to believe that much serious thought has been given to providing for the projection of the very best film image possible.

It is essential that we look ahead to an ultimate resolution in the conflict between theatrical motion pictures and their current antagonist, home television. The theatre, perhaps even more than production, plays the key role in this struggle, and there is no reason why the outcome should be anything but very favorable to the motion picture. However, it is the responsibility of the theatreman, the film producer, and the architect of both today and tomorrow to direct their combined efforts toward offering the theatregoer entertainment which is extremely and dramatically different in picture projection from what can be received at home on the TV set. So far, this has been approached only in a very limited way in such media as Cinerama, Cinemiracle, and 70mm Todd-AO.

BY BEN SCHLANGER
Architect

There seems to be little doubt that achieving that goal of dramatic difference from television lies in the direction of wide film. In this decade, much has been done with wide film, and much of it has fallen short of anticipated potential because, in the course of enlarging the projected image, problems of screen light and picture resolution have been created. These problems indicate limitations that have not been recognized.

Smaller Theatres The Answer

The sleeper, or "ace-in-the-hole" of the entire industry is, I believe, the theatre of some 400 to 900 seats in which a picture large, yet not gigantic, can be projected from wide film with great integrity on a screen ranging from 35 feet to 55 feet wide. Such a theatre would, in general terms, be a superior neighborhood house, or shopping center unit, which must settle for something less than the very specialized Cinerama or similar media. In a medium-size house of less than 1,000 seats, superb picture presentation can be achieved, and with it that dramatic element not present in TV, if the theatre is designed and constructed properly. For film itself, it requires the sensible, practical, yet dramatic, from the producer.

For the time being, theatres in this category probably must continue to use 35mm product; however, there has been sufficient movement to 70mm to indicate that this will be the standard the industry espouses in its competitive battle. In the theatre of the right design and size, projection of a 40 foot picture from 70mm film results in just about the ideal screen image—superb resolution and quality, compared to whatever else the exhibitor currently is getting from 35mm. Of course, 70mm Todd-AO has been reduced successfully to 35mm, but in the process has lost the dramatic element inherent in the 70mm version.

Picture Dominance

Theatres today and tomorrow, new or remodeled, should be designed in such a way that the picture width almost fills the patrons' range of vision, from the most remote viewing location, to bring about the all important effect of picture dominance. Black maskings and dark picture surrounds create a feeling of restriction at the picture edges. Devices are available to affect a trial off light effect at the edges. We have achieved something close to ideal in the well-known Williamsburg Theatre—a non-commercial enterprise—for this purpose, and to a somewhat lesser degree in the new Teatro Olympia at Bogota, Colombia, which is illustrated on these pages as an example of what can be done in a commercial situation. These and other ideas are now available for the aver-

THE SCREENS of the Williamsburg Twin Theatres illustrate Architect Schlanger's approach to the ideal theatre. The image blends off into the screen curvatures, achieving picture dominance.

SEATING in the Williamsburg Theatre is specially designed for optimum viewing, as discussed by the author. Below, lighting is confined to the floor to minimize distractions in theatre.

OLYMPIA •

Bogota, Colombia

Situated on a public park across from Bogota's new Hotel Tequendama and the Bull Ring, in a section between the city's residential area and the principal commercial district, El Teatro Olympia is an important example of the current thinking of its consulting architect, Ben Schlanger, and of other leading theatre architects around the world.

The two story glass and grille-work facade of the Olympia shields and lights the ground floor and the mezzanine, which are linked by a dramatic staircase which is visible from the street. A candy stand is a feature of this area.

The auditorium of the Olympia illustrates some of the points Mr. Schlanger emphasizes in connection with motion picture theatre design. Although the seating capacity of this house somewhat exceeds what this architect considers the ideal, his ideas largely have been carried out with respect to the elimination of screen masking and distracting wall treatment within the subtended angle of view. adjoining the screen are neutral Transite, blending farther back into strips of mahogany. The slightly curved screen rests on an inclined platform which is only slightly elevated. The projected motion picture tends to blend off the screen into a reflection of its own light; this creates "picture dominance" in the auditorium and offers the patron entertainment which is dramatically different from television at home, or any other medium, for that matter, which currently is popular.

Mr. Schlanger's rule for auditorium width (as stated in the article beginning on Page 4) has been observed in the Olympia with only slight variations. The pitch of the main floor, however, is relatively slight, rising somewhat at the screen end. Note in the section drawing on this page the downward projection which permits casting the film image almost to the floor of the auditorium. The inclusion of an upper level of seating in this instance caused the lower level to have somewhat less than the ideal arrangement proposed by Mr. Schlanger. Altogether, the Olympia represents an exceptional achievement in theatre design.

GLEN COVE •

Glen Cove, L.I., N.Y.

The luxuriously furnished and quality-equipped Glen Cove, in suburban Long Island not far from New York City, was opened only two months ago. It is an important example of theatre design and construction today in the best greater metropolitan areas across the country.

The interior of the Glen Cove features gold fibreglass wall coverings in a corrugated design, a gray acoustical plaster ceiling, and a gold Austral stage curtain with turquoise fibreglass side curtains. A special weave carpet is black and gold on a turquoise background.

The lobby areas feature Japanese back-lighted murals, a flagstone floor in some parts, and carpet in others. A special feature of the theatre is a music and announcement system with interior and exterior speakers.

The theatre building itself stands back about 10 feet from the curb to permit driving to the entrance and thence to the large parking area. A free standing attraction board has been installed near the curb.

The building also contains offices, upstairs, and one large store.

MAYFAIR •

Commack, L.I., N.Y.

The new Mayfair, another Long Island neighborhood house in the greater New York City area, is one of several similar units in the Associated Independent Theatres circuit. This enterprising organization under the direction of veteran exhibitor Sam Baker has proven the profit potential of the "grass roots" operation in just such modern, efficient theatres as this one.

LOEW'S 170th STREET •

Miami Beach

The 102nd unit in the nationwide circuit, Loew's 170th Street, opened late last year, is typical of the deluxe shopping center theatres which continue to set the pace for conventional house construction in many localities.

Two large parking areas, one in front of the theatre, the other in the rear, accommodate a total of 600 automobiles. The rear parking area connects with the front of the theatre through an arcade.

Featuring the latest in comfort-providing furnishings and quality equipment, the 170th Street's 60-foot Hurley screen can be adjusted automatically from flat to curved surface to present Todd-AO, CinemaScope, Cinemiracle, and other wide screen processes. The surface of the screen is lenticulated to prevent distortion and to provide a more brilliant picture.

Through National Theatre Supply Company, Phillips All-Purpose projectors have been installed on which a switch from 35mm to 70mm, or vice-versa, can be made in a matter of minutes. Six-track stereophonic sound utilizes surround horns for special effects, when stereo product is played. Only four tracks are used regularly.

COLUMBIA •

London, England

Columbia's new theatre in London is built on the site of an earlier house, the Avenue Pavilion, which was destroyed during the war. In every way contemporary, the Columbia is equipped with the most modern projection equipment, including Todd-AO, and the newest look in decorations and furnishing.

With a potential seating capacity of 800 reduced to approximately 750 for greater comfort, the stadium type auditorium with large screen gives optimum conditions for "audience identification."

The architects, Sir John Burnet, Tait & Partners, working in close collaboration with the L.C.C., have planned for fullest public safety and comfort. Should there be any queueing it will be in comfort, in the spacious ground and mezzanine foyers.

The Columbia, situated at the corner of Shaftesbury Avenue and Frith Street, is entered from the latter by plate glass doors and from the former by two 17 foot glass and stainless steel sliding doors which disappear into the thickness of the wall, leaving an unobstructed opening to the entrance and main booking hall. Outside the doors are columns faced in black granite; beyond these are an illuminated canopy with plyglass laylights and an illuminated black stove-enamelled aluminium and plastic fascia.

The rear wall of the entrance hall facing Shaftesbury Avenue contains a photographic mural 12 feet wide by nine feet high, and illuminated panels containing lettering, transparencies, and coloured plyglass set in a frame of natural and ebonized hardwood, black anodized aluminium, and bronze. On the right is a wall of illuminated acid-etched plate glass containing two ticket offices and additional display panels terminated at its left by a wall of red plastic and gold and black anodized aluminium with a door leading to the car park at first floor level. At this point, stairs descend to the mezzanine foyer, approximately 40 feet square. A glass and bronze balustrade surrounds a large stair well descending to the basement foyer.

The auditorium is egg-shaped and broken with two curved vertical planes. The upper, containing the projection room openings, merges tangentially into the lower at a point close to the proscenium opening which, curved for Todd-AO, forms part of the main curve. The ceiling is pierced with random circular openings, for extract ventilation and lighting. The floor is sloping for optimum vision, with a special enclosure of club seats at the rear.

Auditorium seating is upholstered in foam rubber and covered in tan moquette. The entire theatre is floored with a luxurious carpet, patterned light and dark grey to the auditorium, and elsewhere plain charcoal grey.

A WIDE, dramatic staircase links two levels of the Columbia, right. Below, the auditorium carries out the elegant contemporary theme. At its rear is a special enclosure for loge seats. The floor is pitched for optimum viewing conditions and the proscenium is curved for presentation of Todd-AO. The ceiling is pierced with random circular openings for ventilation and lighting which also add to the free-form feeling achieved in this unusual situation.

ACAPULCO •

Havana, Cuba

The deluxe suburban or neighborhood house trend is not confined to the United States alone. National Theatre Supply Company has equipped the new Teatro Acapulco in Havana, and the result is a house which is equal to the best of its kind in this country.

Situated in one of the most modern districts of the Cuban capital, there is a spacious parking lot adjoining the theatre proper, solving a problem which is not peculiar to the U.S.

Lush tropical vegetation is used in front of the Acapulco for landscaping and decorative purposes. Large areas of glass are used also to give the facade modern, clean lines.

The Acapulco was constructed for the important Circuito Carrera by Cia. Moderna De Construccion, S. A., under the supervision of its president, Jaime Menasce.

THE DOVER DRIVE-IN •

Dover, N.J.

The pioneering Walter Reade circuit recently unveiled the unique new Dover Drive-In, which has the distinction of offering two firsts in the design and construction of outdoor theatres: it is the first to be built above ground, and the first to use a wireless in-car speaker which requires no speaker post and is distributed and collected as patrons enter and leave. At the same time, it is the first drive-in to be incorporated in a shopping center, although such sites have become increasingly popular for the construction of conventional theatres.

Situated in the new Dover Shopping Center, which is unusual itself in that it is a downtown rather than suburban development, the 608-car "Theatre in the Sky" comprises the top level, accessible by ramps, of a two-story parking area. It plays a dual role by functioning as an extra parking lot during the day. The refreshment stand is open day and night, serving a quick lunch to shoppers and food and refreshments to moviegoers.

The development of the "WISP" wireless speaker offers many new possibilities in the construction of drive-ins which should be interesting to watch.

BERLIN DRIVE-IN •

Berlin, Conn.

The new Berlin Drive-In, situated on a heavily traveled route between New Haven and Hartford, is an example of today's larger outdoor theatres: the majority of drive-ins built in recent years have exceeded 1,000 cars in capacity, and have often exceeded 2,000. In general, like the Berlin unit, they offer elaborate refreshment facilities, playgrounds for children, and are equipped with the best projection and sound equipment.

Operating on a double feature, generally first-run policy, the Berlin draws most of its patronage from neighboring residential areas and from among the factory workers of the area.

The 50 by 120 foot screen is custom built and engineered steel construction by the supply dealer for the theatre, Joe Hornstein, Inc. Ashcraft Super Cinex lamps and the Century Model H projectors on Motiograph bases provide superior film projection. Another feature of the Berlin is completely tiled washrooms.

NO DOORMAN REQUIRED HERE

When You Install a Perrey Theatre Turnstile you get more than just a machine. You get the benefit of operating your box office efficiently without the ticket taker or tickets.

The Cashier collects the admissions and the Perrey Turnstile checks the cashier by means of a register in the turnstile. No tickets are required as the turnstile register automatically counts each patron entering the theatre.

Simple Method of Operation. The box office is equipped with a Perrey Theatre Type, Registering, Two-Way Turnstile under the control of the cashier. Patron pays admission charges to the cashier, then passes through the Perrey Turnstile which automatically registers his admission. The patron is automatically guided from the box office to the entrance door by properly designed railings located so that the entrance passageway is always under the control of the cashier.

No tickets are required. The turnstile register checks against the cashier's receipts. No ticket taker is needed.

Where Rates Change at different hours of the same day—readings of the register are taken at the time the rate change goes into effect.

When There Is a Price Differential between adults and children—the turnstile is equipped with an extra register for child admissions.

In addition, there is an overhead visual indicator which lights up when the child admission is registered, thus checking against any possible manipulation by the cashier of adult and child admission receipts.

Perrey Systems Satisfy the Fire Department.

Installations of the Perrey Theatre Type Turnstiles are in operation in most of the large cities of the country where fire department rules are of the strictest. The Perrey Application Engineers design the systems so that there are always as many Exits as required to satisfy the Fire Dept.

The Entrance is so designed that it takes a minimum of space and is located in such a way as not to interfere with an Exit. In fact, the entrance becomes an additional exit in case of emergency. The Perrey Theatre Type Turnstile is always of the two-way passage type, permitting free exit in case of necessity.

The Remodeling of the Broadway

Famous New York Theatre on the Great White Way Is Up-Dated by Major Designer and Manufacturers

■ SOME OF THE MOST modern, and many unique, decorating features for the interior of the motion picture theatre have been incorporated in the complete remodeling and rehabilitation of the Broadway Theatre in New York, owned by the Shubert Theatre Corporation.

Designer Donald Oenslager of New York went hunting for new wall decoration and other eye-catching effects for the Broadway and the results can be described as exceptionally dramatic. This 1,800 seat house, in the heart of the city's theatrical area, has recently housed various Cinerama productions.

The remodeling and redecorating included the elimination of a number of box seats and the complete renovation of theatre chairs. Other new work includes carpeting, stage curtains and drapery, paint, auditorium fire wall, and the complete redecoration or replacement of the lounge furnishing and the rest rooms. The remodeling cost for the theatre has been estimated in excess of $200,000.

Auditorium

In the Broadway auditorium, all the chairs were rehabilitated. They are now upholstered in royal blue or gold in a heavy long-wearing nylon fabric. Alternating rows of two in gold or blue (see illustrations for approximation of the visual effect) produce an interesting staggered pattern which complements the overall decor and injects a dramatic note.

The auditorium is completely carpeted in blue background on which are superimposed gold specks. In contrast, stairways throughout the house have been carpeted in bright red.

The stage curtain has been made of a special woven cotton and rayon with Lurex gold thread in contrasting colors of blue, yellow, gold, and beige, the pattern running in a lateral design. The overall measurements of the curtain are 100 feet by 30 feet, draped in 100 per cent fullness. Drapery of the same fabric has been used on both side walls to frame 30-foot lucite windows which were installed to mask an area formerly containing the eliminated box seats. These structural additions emit a soft and diffused light into the auditorium, and they blend well with the blue-painted walls surmounted by a great golden dome.

The rear of the auditorium has received the same thorough treatment. The wall has been covered in the same fabric used elsewhere, achieving an exceptionally unified effect. The production and the installation of all curtains and drapery was entrusted to Novelty Scenic Studios of New York.

Inner Lobby Mural

A striking mural has been installed on the curved inner lobby wall, which backs the rear wall of the auditorium. This creation represents the glow of advertising signs and lights in the Times Square area after dark. The abstract design is executed in odd shapes of Lucite in brilliant red, blue, green, and yellow on a background of black maughahyde.

The floor covering of the inner lobby carries out the color scheme of the rest of the theatre with tile of a modern design in a black, white, and red pattern.

Lounge

The unusually spacious lounge downstairs repeats the floor treatment of the inner lobby with a slight variation in the pattern. This offsets walls painted in red, blue, and

Matting For Many Purposes

A Review of the Numerous Types of Matting Materials Offering Protection and Safety Throughout the Theatre

■ THE RESTAURANT BUSINESS, long an important user of floor matting, is being emulated by theatres more each year in their need for a floor covering which provides sanitation, safety, comfort, and beauty. This, of course, can be attributed to the increased importance of refreshments in the operation of theatres and, particularly, drive-ins.

Especially in demand have been those types of mats which are fabricated on rust-resistant, galvanized steel spring wire and those which have no openings in the mats large enough to catch even the smallest domestic or imported ladies' shoe heel. A trend to the use of vinyl plastic mats, rather than rubber, also has distinguished the market.

Plastic Mats

The rust-resistant spring-steel wire feature probably has been favored where foot traffic has tended to bring considerable water indoors, and the plastic mats are popular where surfaces, such as parking lots, have transferred oil to mats which if made of rubber would not afford the length of service anticipated. Plastic mats generally are lighter in weight, making them easier to handle. Nonporous, the dirt stays on the surface, cannot become imbedded, and hence is easier to clean. Closer fabricating of mat segments to eliminate the tripping hazard, resulting from the catching of small heels, of course, has been a feature which has equal appeal in all lines of business.

Fade resistant colors in plastic and rubber link mats permit the forming of an unlimited variety of beautiful patterns and designs. Lobby and foyer floors which are no longer attractive can be enhanced by the use of mats. Even worn areas in old carpeting can often be effectively and economically covered by matting.

Link matting always has been popular for eliminating dirt by trapping it at the entrance. Dirt and sand tracked onto carpeting is soon ground in and quickly cuts the nap of the carpet to shreds, slashing the life of the finest carpet in half. At the entrance, traffic directional lines can be employed to provide a functional and attractive pattern.

Reduces Costs

Cleaning and redecorating costs usually are greatly reduced where good entrance matting is installed. When a theatreman is faced with dirty snow, slush, ice, and water tracked all over his entrance, he begins to see how much easier his maintenance job would be with matting doing the work instead of his staff.

Heating and ventilating systems blow tracked-in dust into the air and eventually it settles on furnishings, walls, equipment, and ceilings. Up go redecorating costs.

Correctly placed, the proper type of matting will perform like a series of small squeegees, scraping the dirt, sand, mud, snow, and water from the shoes and collecting it in the mat openings.

One fall by a patron on a slippery floor can be ruinous to a theatre from a financial point of view and result in the loss of valuable good will, even if insurance coverage is carried. Cases involving suits for $100,000 or more for single falls are not unusual. Maintaining floors and stairs in good condition is the best way to avoid trouble. Safety underfoot should always be provided. A nonslip footing on a wet, sloping terrazzo floor is a must.

One of the most accident-prone areas in a theatre is the rest room. Counter-Tred matting can be most helpful here. It provides a non-slip surface, is long-wearing, and can be rolled easily up for mopping of floors. A high degree of sanitation is obtained by the low count bacteria feature of this approved product.

Nylon Compound

Nylon corded rubber compound matting should be used around popcorn machines and drink vendors. It hugs the floor and has a safety beveled edge which prevents tripping. It is tough, slip-proof, easily cleaned, and economical. The deep grooves catch spilled drinks and bits of food and candy and prevent it reaching carpets or creating a slippery floor condition.

Aisles, Stairs

For aisles, a long-ribbed runner matting should be used, preferably made of nyracord to withstand the concentration of wear. It hugs the floor, silences footsteps, and costs far less than carpet. Furthermore, it is vermin-proof and can be easily cleaned by a vacuum or damp mop.

Stairs which lead to balconies or down to rest rooms frequently present a hazard because of worn floor covering or dim lighting. Nyracord stair treads are slip-resistant, exceptionally long-wearing, and easily cleaned. They also have a marked effect on silencing footsteps.

Doormen get tired standing in one position.

IN THE FOYER of the New Hampshire theatre at right, rubber matting has been installed in the center panel in a design depicting the wellknown "Old Man of the Mountain" landmark in the area.

NYLON-corded Counter-Tred matting is used behind this refreshment stand to insure firm footing.

for extended periods and their feet often get cold. A small, inexpensive, resilient, comfort mat and an electrically heated mat are the cures.

Types of Mats

There are so many types of matting on the market, each of which has been designed for a particular application, that it is wise to rely on the technical knowledge and experience of a matting engineer when selections are being made. Mats are produced of rubber, nylon-corded rubber, plastic, fiber, wood, steel, neoprene, and many other materials. This service usually is offered without cost or obligation, assures you of an installation that will be satisfactory functionally and artistically, and makes your maintenance dollar go farther.

A brief rundown on a few types of matting and their applications may be helpful to those who elect to do their own selecting.

Colored vinyl plastic link matting beautifies entrances and lobbies. Corrugated ridges scrape off dirt, trap it in the openings, keep it out of sight, prevent tracking throughout the theatre and onto expensive carpets, thus reducing cleaning and redecorating costs. Links are usually woven on galvanized, rust-resisting spring steel wire. This type of mat ordinarily can be fabricated in any size and shape and in a wide variety of colors.

Counter-Tred matting, made from nylon cord and bound with rubber compounds, is ideal for use in front of and behind serving counters, in lavatories, and on dirty dish areas to reduce breakage around dish washing equipment.

Flexible wood link matting is appropriately used in kitchens or other food preparation areas. It lies flat, is substantially constructed on a rust-resisting galvanized steel spring wire framework and has beveled ends to prevent slipping. Grooves allow drainage, and it folds into a compact roll for easy handling and cleaning.

Tweed nyracord floor tile is the perfect floor material for concession buildings. It affords insulation for the feet against cold or hot floor surfaces. Its long service has been proven by years of use in locker rooms and ice-skating rinks. High resiliency silences noise.

Solving Acoustical Problems

A New "Sound-Shield" Product Which Can Be Applied Directly To Existing Walls and Ceilings Is Gaining Wide Acceptance

By F. M. STUMPF
Vice-President-Research
Columbia Acoustics and Fireproofing Company

■ MANY THEATRE OWNERS, in an effort to regain audiences lost to other forms of entertainment, have found that a complete modernization of interior finishes, heating and air conditioning facilities, amplifying systems, and seating arrangements have resulted in larger audiences through increased customer comfort. Often, this modernization or remodeling work has necessitated a complete redesign of the theatre's acoustical properties due to critical changes in the amount of sound absorptive materials present within a given area. This problem often exists in theatres that were acoustically perfect prior to interior modernization. The feeling of intimacy the audience achieves when all wanted sounds are originating from the screen is often lost, and acoustical redesign must be considered for complete satisfaction.

In many cases, theatre owners have neglected acoustical consideration due to the costs involved in the installation of sound absorbing materials. Most acoustical materials available today require a system of backing boards, metal runners, clips and other attachment systems for maintenance of true planes, acceptable appearance, and efficient acoustical absorption. Building owners interested in modernization of interiors have constantly been in search of a practical, economical acoustical finish material which could be applied directly to existing wall and ceiling surfaces.

A product manufactured by Columbia Acoustics and Fireproofing Company has proven to be the answer to this problem. Marketed under the name of CAFCO Sound-Shield, it is fast gaining widespread acceptance throughout the country as an attractive, highly sound-absorbent finish material for application direct to most existing wall and ceiling surfaces. The problems encountered by preformed acoustical materials in applications over irregularly shaped surfaces are overcome by CAFCO Sound-Shield because it is sprayed directly to existing surfaces in a continuous coat to form true, level planes. Unlike many machine-applied finish materials, this product is formulated to provide excellent abrasion resistance.

Use of the machine-applied Sound-Shield in modernization and acoustical treatment offers the owner these advantages:

1. Tests performed by Underwriters' Laboratories, Inc., have shown that CAFCO Sound-Shield is incombustible. A classification established by the building industry to measure the "flame spread" of an interior finish material is referred to in determining the performance of a material exposed to fire. The flame spread rating of this product has met the incombustible classification whether applied over combustible or incombustible surfaces. In many cases, a building owner can realize some reduction in fire insurance premiums if Sound-Shield is applied to existing wall or ceiling surfaces which did not meet the incombustible classification.
2. The thickness of CAFCO Sound-Shield may be varied or tapered to meet acoustical design requirements through elimination of potential "dead" areas and critical "live" areas. This flexibility of acoustical design is not always possible with preformed materials of a predetermined thickness.

3. If an exhibitor is eager to maintain certain irregularly shaped surfaces within the theatre, CAFCO Sound-Shield easily can be formed to maintain the aesthetic benefits of these surfaces. Since it is applied in a continuous blanket, the problems of open joints, cutting, scribing and curvature faced by preformed materials are completely eliminated.
4. Unlike acoustical plasters, this material is applied in only one coat to full thickness, and requires a minimum of drying time before the theatre again can be used. Normal structural movement within ceiling or wall areas is absorbed without cracking or spalling of the surface.

5. Application techniques employed by CAFCO Sound-Shield contractors permit the owner or designer to select a texture best suited for each area to be treated. The fissured or travertine-type surface resulting from application can fall into a smooth, fine, medium, or coarse classification of texture.
6. The natural finish provides a pleasing white surface. The fiber may be painted repeatedly without appreciably affecting absorbent characteristics.
7. Because CAFCO Sound-Shield possesses excellent thermal resistance characteristics, in many cases owners can realize reductions in heating and air conditioning costs when it is applied to interior surfaces. Comfortable room temperatures are easily and economically achieved.

CAFCO Sound-Shield is applied by factory-trained, franchised CAFCO contractors located throughout the United States, Canada, and several foreign countries. Often they are in a position to provide recommendations regarding areas to be treated, and can furnish estimates covering installation costs. Since acoustics are a prime consideration in the modernization or remodeling of theatres, a competent acoustical consultant should always be secured for thorough and proper

New Uses For Copper In Theatres

Copper and its Alloys are Becoming Increasingly Valuable For Efficient Commercial Heating and Cooling Systems

■ IT HAS BEEN TRADITIONAL in the construction of theatres in this country to specify copper and copper-base alloys for many purposes. Sheet copper has been, and is, virtually standard for flashings, gutters, downspouts, and other sheet metal work such as skylights, louvres, decking and marquees. Bronze is widely used for doors, ticket booths, and such ornamentation and trim as stair and balcony railings, electric light fixtures, frames, grilles, and hardware. Plumbing and heating lines are generally of red brass pipe or copper tube.

In recent years, a great deal of copper and copper-base alloys have been utilized in the air conditioning of theatres, as well as structures of all kinds. In such installations, cooling coils are generally of finned copper tube while both copper and brass are employed in the condensers and evaporators of the refrigeration units required to cool comfortably the large buildings. There are many other uses of these metals in air cooling installations too numerous to list.

An outstanding example of the generous use of copper and its alloys is the luxurious Radio City Music Hall in New York City, perhaps the nation's finest motion picture theatre. Certainly, it is one spot that every visitor to New York has on his or her "must see" list, whether American or from abroad. Bronze—that age-old alloy which was used for ornamentation by the ancient Egyptians more than 5000 years ago—is found in entrance doors, elevator trim, railings, grilles, hardware, and for many other purposes throughout this magnificent theatre. More than 30,000 pounds of copper were used in the air conditioning system itself.

However, most of these applications of the red metal and its versatile family of alloys are more or less standard in good construction and can be found in almost every theatre in the country. Copper and its alloys will continue to be used for these installations because time has proved that these metals are most durable and economical in the long run. Copper, the most useful of man's metals, is also the most resistant to corrosion. Copper can best withstand the ravages of time and weather.

A new application of copper that is creating a great deal of interest in building circles would seem to offer splendid opportunities in the construction of theatres. This is radiant, or panel, heating which is being successfully employed in numerous buildings of all types throughout the country. In addition to its wide use in residences, radiant heating systems have been installed in numerous churches, schools and theatres—not to mention office buildings, stores, factories, garages, aircraft hangars and greenhouses.

The principle of radiant heating is not new. Primitive men huddled around a fire were being warmed by radiant heat. Ancient Romans used a system of radiant heating, called hypocaust, consisting of pipes in the floors through which hot water apparently was circulated. Heat rays from the sun, often strong enough to warm human beings in winter, is radiant heat.

Radiant Heating

Radiant heating is achieved by installing pipe panels—usually consisting of copper tube—in the floor, ceiling or walls of a structure through which steam or hot water is circulated to provide the heat source. Radiant heating, in contrast with conventional heating systems, imparts heat by direct radiation to the occupants of a given space rather than by heating the air volume in the room. This results in a healthful atmosphere which is stimulating to an individual by providing refreshing, cool air, yet assures comfort by a radiation of heat. Most people, accustomed to overheated rooms, are amazed at the feeling of being outdoors that is experienced with a radiant heating installation.

Heat Transmission

When the conventional type of heating system is used about 70 to 85 per cent of the heat is transmitted by convection, the remainder by radiation. In radiant heating the average approximates 40 percent by convection and 60 percent by radiation. In conventional heating systems there is a "layering" of hot air from the top. Comfort is achieved by surrounding the persons in the room by a blanket of warm air. In radiant heating systems comfort is achieved by controlling the heat loss of the body by direct rays of heat. The air may be quite cool but the radiant heat rays prevent the loss of the natural heat layer or blanket surrounding the person, heat which is generated by the body. An analogy may be made to a spring day when the air is cool yet the sun's rays provide warmth, conditions which make human beings so full of "pep" at that time of the year.

Radiant heating in contrast with the conventional systems of heating relies mainly on heat transfer by radiation from the walls, the ceilings or the floor, the temperature of which is raised above that of the space it is called upon to heat by means of hot water or steam pipes, by electrically heated wires or by warm air flues.

Of particular importance in structures with high ceilings and large spaces to be heated, such as theatres, is that the effect of heat radiation extends evenly throughout the space to be heated. Most of the heat is not wasted by being convected to the higher levels where it is not needed.

Heating Panels

Copper tube is ideally suited for the heating panels of a radiant heating system and is the leading choice by architects and heating engineers from coast to coast. Copper tube is corrosion resistant and durable, and can be expected to endure for the life of the building. In the long run, copper tube will be found to be more economical than other materials which may be slightly lower in initial cost. Another important consideration is the high thermal (heat) conductivity of copper.

Sidewalk Heating

Consideration may also be given to the possibility of installing copper coils in the sidewalks around a theatre to prevent the formation of ice and snow during the winter months. Hot water circulated through the copper tube, imbedded in the cement, melts the snow as it falls and prevents the formation of ice. Many buildings have installed such systems and find them most practical. They have also been installed on steep hills on roadways and one hospital has so equipped the driveway used by ambulances.

With the growing popularity of ice shows, some theatres have installed systems enabling them to convert their stages to ice rinks in a few hours. Here again, copper tube becomes the heart of the installation as the piping system through which the refrigerant is circulated. This installation can be either temporary or permanent.

Copper and copper-base alloys are also vital for the extensive lighting system required in the motion picture theatre. This includes the lighting for both inside and outside the theatre. In addition, the projection equipment involves a considerable amount of copper and its alloys.

For maximum picture dominance, the width of the audience seating area in the theatre auditorium should not exceed by more than 25 per cent the width of the picture projected. Also, a good rule of thumb is to keep the picture width in feet as close as possible to the number of millimeters of the film width. In these ways, the public can be given an important dramatic difference without resorting to the deeply curved screens essential to Cinerama and other limited-exhibition media. While the latter processes have their very particular place on the scene, we cannot expect them to become the standard of an industry in which the key-stone is the more modest operation, for the obvious reason that the average theatre is in no position to acquire or operate the amount of equipment required.

Design Considerations

Wall surfaces adjoining the screen must be designed for trail off or blend off of the picture as previously stated. Maskings and other devices on and around screens, and distracting decoration on the auditorium wall surfaces within the angle of view, are direct contradictions to the objective of picture dominance. Every psychological block must be eliminated between the viewer and the screen.

Ideally, the image should be projected down to the floor to eliminate the picture up on the wall effect. This has been accomplished, for all practical purposes, at Williamsburg by means of a unique seating system combining a strong pitch of the floor with low walls to shield the view of preceding spectators. This makes the viewer feel close contact with the projected scene.

In analyzing the method and degree of blend off, the theatre's individual design requirements must be taken into consideration. But, perhaps the purpose of this device can be understood best by comparison with the matting on a painting or any other picture. A large picture placed on a mat (masking being the theatre's mat) of equal or greater size results in the loss of picture importance or dominance. Minimum, neutral matting has been proven most effective and the elimination of masking and sharply contrasting picture surround in theatres is proving to be the most effective and dramatic way to present a motion picture.

The large roofed theatre will lose its usefulness principally because of television competition, and it is predictable that industry expediency and the day of 70mm will prove the usefulness of a theatre containing not more than approximately 1,200 seats. The exhibitor today and tomorrow must offer something that the patron really notices—which is most easily achieved in the smaller theatre.

Other Trends

In acoustics, the current trend is to treat the auditorium with far more sound absorption material than heretofore. This has developed because motion pictures contain, as they almost always have, both indoor and outdoor scenes. Indoor sound effects normally are handled very adequately by the sound track of the film. For reality in the Sponge rubber or plastic comfort matting eliminates fatigue for doormen and cashiers. Used as a runner, it silences foot traffic.

Corrugated Perforated Matting affords especially good scrapeage at a low cost. Made of rubber compounds, it is particularly fitted for use where there are wet floor conditions. The ridged bottom affords aeration and drainage.

Rubber and cord matting hugs the floor and is ideal for carpet protection.

Grease-proof vinyl plastic link or segmented matting and oil and grease-resistant Counter-Tred Safety Matting is recommended wherever cooking oils or greases are used. It is non-absorbent, non-porous, and is unaffected by animal fats, fish oils, hot soapy water, grease, gasoline, and kerosene.

Corded rubber fabric link matting is quiet to walk on and lasts extremely long. Its virtue is in service rather than appearance; frequently it is used as a general purpose mat.

outdoor scenes, however, more sound absorption is essential because in the open (except in confined areas) sound absorption is 100 per cent; there is none of the sound reflection which is present indoors, in the theatre. Only by better acoustical treatment of the auditorium can the outdoor scene take on greater feeling of reality.

In seating, we can soon expect more comfort from new designs coming from manufacturers. In installation, greater width per person in seating is necessary as the viewing distance to the screen decreases, to allow a fuller view of the screen width between the heads of preceding spectators.

With respect to projection provisions in contemporary theatre design where it is assumed that 35mm will have to be included for some time to come, the structural elements (including exits) must be kept far enough back from the picture area to allow flexibility for installation of a screen suitable for 70mm. The front or screen end of the theatre must be a flexible one, adaptable to future developments, not bound to the practices of today.

More a suggestion on my part than a trend is free locker space for patrons to check hats, coats, packages, and the like, instead of the attendant-and-tipping system (or no system at all) common to so many theatres today. In this way, the exhibitor would offer free what has been a 25 cents (or more) service. Many, if not the great majority, of theatregoers rebel at additional cost for checking service and, as a result, sit through the picture in discomfort, wearing or holding part or all of their paraphernalia. It is services like this which will enable the roofed theatre to compete ever more effectively with drive-ins.

Tomorrow's Ideal

The Williamsburg Theatre, seating 250, could be expanded in concept to 500 or more seats to be the ideal standard theatre of the future. Here, distractions of every kind have been eliminated. The auditorium is a viewing vacuum, the audience walks into a space which gives a spatial feeling. Blue light bathes the theatre and gives it the impression of floating in space. Screen titles and credits have been dispensed with in favor of posting them outside. Conventional lighting has been abandoned or—more exactly—lighting has been put where it belongs in the auditorium—on the floor. There are no downlights to distract the viewer; extraneous light is present only where it is needed: on the floor in the walking- or aisle-areas.

In conclusion then, we look forward to a future of small enough theatres with a large enough film area to project about a 45 foot picture from 70mm film. Such conditions as have been described here can make the patron feel close contact with the scene and give the dramatic impact available only through skilled technical presentation, on an admission fee basis, in properly designed theatres.

Combination Drive-In And Motel

Australian Activity in the Outdoor Theatre Field Is an Exciting Harbinger of Tomorrow's Practices

■ AN OUTSTANDING DEVELOPMENT last year on the Australian drive-in scene—long an active and fast growing frontier for the outdoor theatre—is the combination drive-in theatre and hotel-motel. Certain to have its effect on thinking about drive-ins in this country and elsewhere, the Shandon Drive-In and Hotel-Motel at Seaton, near Adelaide in the state of South Australia, attracted worldwide interest when it was opened recently. It was said at the time that it was the first of its kind anywhere.

Most of the transient guest rooms at the Shandon-Seaton offer a clear, uninterrupted view to the drive-in's screen through large, plate glass windows. Sound effects are provided from the regular film track by special speakers located in the rooms.

The M. G. Henderson enterprises of Adelaide, operating the Shandon-Seaton situation, and active in construction and other related fields, have completed a circuit of four Shandon Drive-Ins in less than three years. The Seaton theatre, the largest of the quartet and one of the largest in Australia, accommodates 1,003 cars. Others in the circuit are the Shandon Drive-Ins at Elizabeth (575 cars, opened in May, 1958) and Port Pirie (575 cars, opened September, 1957), both in South Australia, and the Shandon at Warrnambool, Victoria, for 700 cars, opened in December, 1956. At present, the Seaton theatre illustrated here, is the only one with an adjoining motel. However, two additional drive-ins will be started, probably this year, one in the Adelaide area and the other near Wyhalla. The success of the Seaton adjunct indicates that hotels, motels, or both, may be incorporated at the new sites or added to older ones. Indeed, the Seaton theatre already is slated for extensive remodeling and expansion.

The Shandon Drive-Ins, apart from the essential difference between them in the terrain on which they are situated, are almost identical in design, construction, and equipment. (See next page for sample Reference Data). The M. G. Henderson and Associated Companies' Australian Building Company has developed a screen which has become standard for all the Shandons. At Seaton, the screen is 100 feet by 44 feet, mounted on tubular steel framework. It is faced with zinc-annealed flat sheet iron and a special, highly reflective paint manufactured by the Endura Paint Company.

Patrons at the Shandon situations, including the Seaton where the hotel-motel offers separate dining facilities, arrive about an hour before the program starts to have dinner, although the hot menu is served until the last intermission. Meals may be taken away to patrons' cars upon payment of a nominal refundable deposit for the crockery and silverware. Like many Australian drive-ins, the Shandon theatres offer very comprehensive menus.

The Shandon operations, while characteristic of the high quality of the drive-in theatre industry in Australia, point the way to what can very well be an entirely new area for exploration by outdoor theatres around the world.

Vigorous thinking of this kind about the further expansion of drive-ins should bring about an even healthier industry in many different localities. The added facilities of this kind are just one more way, it has been found in Australia, of drawing greater patronage to the drive-in.

The Roof Top Drive-In Theatre

Now, the Outdoor Theatre Atop a Shopping Center
Becomes a Practical and Highly Profitable Unit

■ THE DRIVE-IN THEATRE finally has found its place in the sun: marriage with the rapidly expanding, deluxe shopping and recreation centers. Until recently, the developer of shopping centers had frowned upon the inclusion of a lowly drive-in theatre in his high minded plans.

VOGEL

Eyes have been opened and planning has been reappraised, all because of the new Walter Reade Drive-In, built on top of a parking garage, serving the new downtown Dover, N. J., Shopping Center. My association with this project was as a consultant for Walter Reade Theatres to redesign, solve, and bring to a conclusion the continuing problems of building this first second story drive-in. (See Page 14).

A few years back, almost every newly conceived shopping center of consequential size included a spacious indoor theatre as an integral part. Lately, shopping center developers have been discouraged from the inclusion of this type of showcase. It is true that in recent years some developers have included drive-in theatres, if their property was extensive enough, but these have generally been planned independently, and thus proper and integral planning has not been achieved. None have really combined the facilities of both the stores and the outdoor theatre into an integral, intermingled operation. It is this that has been envisioned.

The rendering, Figure One, portrays a plan for a 1,000 car drive-in which has nine of the ramps on the ground level (in the darker shading) and the next six on the roof (in lighter shading). Under this roof is the major part of the regular stores which face a mall, across which are situated two department stores and smaller regular stores. The department stores help mask the area lighting from the screen surface. Of course, there is no such problem with the stores located under the rear ramp area.

The drawing of Figure Two gives an idea of the layout of the stores beneath the rear ramp area. Note the desirable features of rear truck delivery under cover, employee and public parking under cover, and excess storage under cover.

The Concession Building, which is shown more clearly in the model layout, Figure Three (Page 39) houses a restaurant and a separate cafeteria operation in the same area. Thus, it would be operated day and night. Daytime shoppers parking on the roof deck have almost direct access to all stores by stairs and escalators. They even can stay for the movie at night, after eating at the conveniently located restaurant.

All Year Drive-In Comfort Is Here

A Combination Heating and Cooling System Offers One Solution to a Familiar Problem of Drive-Ins

■ A NEW TYPE OF EQUIPMENT for drive-ins which reached the market recently may add a significant dimension to the growing trend toward year 'round outdoor theatre operation. This equipment, offered by BTU Industries, Inc., and characterized by the manufacturer as "a system for year 'round comfort conditioning," provides both cold weather in-car heating and hot weather in-car air conditioning in the same package.

Types of Heating Systems

Heating or air conditioning can be provided for a number of separate use points, such as the various rooms in a building or a number of cars parked in a theatre field, in two ways. One is to have individual heating or cooling units (energy converters) at each use point. A familiar example is the traditional fireplace or gas log in every room in early domestic heating practice. The other approach is to distribute hot or cold fluid (air, water, steam) to the various use points from a central unit.

In the central type system, it is the end product (hot or cold fluid) that is distributed, whereas in the individual unit system, the raw energy (fuel, electricity) must be distributed and some provision made for energy conversion at the use point. Each has its merits and its shortcomings but, in general, the central type system is preferred where practicable.

In the indoor field, for example, the central type heating system has been generally accepted, of course, for some time for reasons of economy and convenience, and the growing trend is toward central air conditioning for similar reasons.

By JAMES M. RELPH
General Manager
BTU Industries, Inc.

In the drive-in field, a central type system presents some unusual problems, revolving mainly around the relatively greater distances between individual use points, and the fact that the entire surface area around each use point is a traffic area that must be kept open at all times. Up to the present time, problems such as these have restricted drive-in heating systems to the unit type, and heretofore no air conditioning of any type has been available.

THE JET-HEET system has been installed for 500 cars at the Totowa Drive-In, Totowa, New Jersey.

The Jet-Heet System

The new system for drive-ins, marketed under the trade name "Jet-Heet," is a central type system. It is an outgrowth of a domestic heating and air conditioning development by Jet-Heet, Inc., an engineering firm. As certain unique features of the Jet-Heet domestic system made it practical for adaptation to drive-ins, a brief description of the domestic system will help to explain the drive-in application.

In the Jet-Heet domestic system, conventional large sheet metal air ducts are replaced by small (two inch I. D.) prefabricated ducts that install like BX cable. This type of air distribution system requires a furnace that will deliver air at high pressure and about four times normal temperature, so that a small quantity of very hot air will carry the required heat to each room. Before being discharged into the room, the small volume of high temperature air is mixed with a large volume of room air to obtain a moderate temperature air mixture at the discharge outlet.

Furnace Design

To obtain the high temperature high pressure air required, Jet-Heet engineers created the furnace unit shown in the schematic illustration (Page 36). This furnace has a jet-engine type burner which delivers high temperature gaseous combustion products to very narrow passages in a heat exchanger. Here the heat is transferred from these gases to fresh air which is forced by a blower through narrow adjacent passages in the heat exchanger. A small quantity of air from the same blower is diverted to the burner for combustion air. The fresh air and hot flue gases flow in opposite directions ("counterflow") for most efficient heat extraction per unit of heat exchange surface, thus keeping the unit very compact. Furthermore, the burner operates with a positive pressure in the combustion space so that no chimney is required to produce a draft. This minimizes air flow through the flue passages to decrease stand-by losses when the furnace is not operating.

Several thousand Jet-Heet furnace systems were sold and installed in homes for a mass field test, and performance characteristics were sufficiently impressive that the Navy Department specified Jet-Heet furnaces for its Antarctic "Operation Deepfreeze." The same small size ductwork that distributes hot air from the Jet-Heet furnace also is usable for air conditioning. Small quantities of relatively low temperature air are distributed from a high pressure air conditioner and mixed at each room before discharge.

Air Conditioning

Heretofore, utilizing the same furnace ductwork for air conditioning has led to problems of ducts sweating on the outside, because conventional large sheetmetal ducts are costly to insulate. The Jet-Heet concept of distributing a small quantity of much colder air through small prefabricated insulated ducts eliminated this problem. Since the air in the Jet-Heet unit is cooled sufficiently to freeze out practically all water, it has an added advantage of supplying completely dry cold air at the discharge outlets. This is an equally valuable feature in drive-in air conditioning.

The concept of circulating relatively small quantities of air at relatively high temperature for heating and relatively low temperature for cooling represented a major step toward overcoming hot and cold air distribution problems for applications such as that at the drive-in, where long distribution runs are required. Total heat (or cooling) delivered is a combined function of air temperature and air volume, much as with electrical systems where the power delivered is a combined function of current and voltage. Just as a low voltage, high current electric power system requires relatively large wires to transmit a given amount of power, so also a low temperature high air volume heat system requires relatively large ducts to transmit a given amount of heat energy.

Features For The Drive-In

In the Jet-Heet Drive-In System, heated (or cooled) air is distributed through an underground duct to individual parking stations. At each station, branch tubes carry the air to individual diffusers that are placed in the car window.

Among the features of the domestic system that helped bridge the gap to a drive-in system, the following were important: First, a high temperature, low volume air system makes it possible to distribute air long distances (up to 150 feet) through relatively small underground ducts (four to six inch I. D.), thereby to serve up to 31 cars from a single unit. Larger ducts required by a higher volume system would have very high heat losses, adversely affecting operating cost and reducing the number of cars serviceable by a unit of given size. Larger ducts also would be extremely costly to purchase and install.

Second, the furnace unit itself is very compact and can be installed with its major axis parallel to the ground, giving an inconspicuous silhouette, lower than an automobile, that does not block line of sight.

Third, the high pressure burner, requiring no natural draft, eliminates the need for chimneys which could not be tolerated on a drive-in field. For air conditioning, since the Jet-Heet design puts out dryer air than most conventional air conditioners, hot weather in-car comfort is further augmented. Such comfort can be affected both by reducing the water content (humidity) in the air and by lowering the air temperature. In addition, the circulation of air alone will give a feeling of comfort. This can be done with the high-pressure Jet-Heet blower, even without any cooling of the air.

Advantages For The Drive-In

As a drive-in system, the "central" heating and air conditioning concept has many inherent advantages. Perhaps of greatest significance is the air conditioning aspect, as the same distribution system works year around, eliminating all "open window" problems. Operating costs are low; each 100,000 BTU furnace consumes a maximum of 0.9 GPH of Number 2 fuel oil to heat 31 cars in the winter, while a five-ton air conditioner serves the same number of cars in the summer, under most severe conditions. As outdoor temperatures moderate, fuel consumption decreases. Up to 30 cfm of fresh air is brought into the car constantly, to give continuous replacement of stale air and to distribute heat or cold air uniformly. The system is completely safe, as there is no combustion or other energy conversion within the car. There is no incentive to theft, as the air tubes and diffusers have no practical use elsewhere.

The air conditioner companion for the Jet-Heet furnace previously described is a five-ton air cooled unit. It is a generally conventional condenser-compressor type, being unique only in that a deeper than normal coil is used to obtain lower than normal air temperatures. It is powered by 220 volt electric service, and has approximately the same dimensions as the companion furnace.

The furnace unit and/or air conditioner assembly are completely enclosed in a single housing having a top access panel for servicing of the units. Outside air is brought into the housing through a filter panel by a high pressure blower which forces the air across the evaporator coil and then into the inlet pipe leading into the underground main. Heated air from the furnace enters the inlet pipe through a branch connection, so that there is some tempering of the heated air which leaves the furnace at 350° F. When switchover is made in the spring from heating to cooling, a damper on the furnace outlet is closed to prevent backflow through the furnace unit.

At each housing, individual concealed switches are accessible from outside the housing to control the furnace and air conditioner units. Alternatively, a master switch panel can be installed in the projection booth or concession stand to allow selective operation of the units from a central location such as the projection booth or manager's office.

For the furnace units only, 20 ampere service to each unit is adequate, and usually is handled by local electrical contractors. For combination heating and air conditioning, 50 ampere service is needed.

Fuel Type And Cost

Fuel for the furnace units can be either gas or oil, depending on which will give the most favorable combination of initial and operating costs. In the case of gas, the piping (like the electrical work) utilizes mainly the same trench system as the underground ductwork. In the case of fuel oil, several alternatives are available. For areas where above-ground storage is permitted by local codes, a 55 gallon tank for each unit, installed by the unit housing, is most economical on first cost. Where burial is mandatory, tanks from 275 gallons to 1000 gallons or more can be used, each serving up to five furnace units. In most areas the delivered price of fuel oil depends to some extent on the quantity taken by the customer on each delivery. The proper size tank is selected on the basis of the arrangement of furnaces required in the field, which affects the number that can be served per tank, and the applicable fuel oil costs.

Underground Ductwork

The underground ductwork is a major component. It is placed in a trench 12 inches wide and 18 inches deep, opened and back-filled by local general contractors. This main duct must be rugged to withstand abuse in shipping and installation, as well as to resist traffic loads, shifting ground with changing seasons, and different soil conditions. It must be well insulated, completely watertight and lend itself to rapid, economical installation.

A good combination of these characteristics is found in a structure of urethane foam plastic. This material has exceptional insulation characteristics, with a K factor of 0.23. The material is formed one inch thick over an aluminum foil core. At the outer surface of the foam, a coil of wire is embedded to provide structural rigidity. This complete assembly is covered by a watertight jacket of plastic material, with suitable provision for rapid coupling to adjacent sections of the pipe. Since approximately 18 feet of underground pipe are required for each pair of speakers served, pipe costs are a prime factor in total system cost, and a continuing cost reduction engineering program is directed toward this vital component of the system.

Branch Tubes

The branch tubes which lead upward at each speaker station are detachable at ground level for easy replacement in case of damage by careless drivers. These tubes comprise a two inch diameter lock-seam aluminum core, giving flexibility and durability. A one inch covering of fiberglass insulation over the core is protected by a fiberglass fabric jacket. An outer covering of plastic material provides a waterproof covering. The tubes are attached to the speaker post by a metal bracket. The tubes normally drape over the speaker junction box when not in use. The elastic return cords formerly used to return the tube to the junction box are eliminated by placing the holding bracket more than half way up the tube so that the tube cannot touch the ground even if it is not replaced on the junction box.

Diffusers

The diffuser that distributes air inside the car window also has been the subject of considerable engineering study. The basic structure consists of an aluminum casting with a circular neck portion that fits inside the core of the branch tube. The casting has a coating of urethane foam insulation that will insure a moderate surface temperature for handling (placement in the car window opening), and also to avoid any damage to the glass or window frame. There are four elongated openings in the face of the diffuser. Two of these direct air downward, front and rear. The other two direct air upward, front and rear. This arrangement develops air curtains that sheath the walls, floor, and roof to give uniform distribution throughout the car, without direct air flow on any passenger.

THE FLEXIBLE CONNECTIONS for the Jet-Heat system are a plus factor. They are almost impervious to damage, weather, pilfering or other loss.

The openings at the window on each side of the diffuser serve as discharge vents for stale air which is displaced by the incoming fresh air. Originally, each diffuser included an individual damper control for regulating the air flow. Field use has established that this is an unnecessary complication, as any desired adjustment can be made by varying a window opening either at the inlet window or at any of the others. In one sense, this is an advantage since any passenger can open his or her window to modify the local temperature in that part of the car.

Since there will be some air temperature change along the underground main between the furnace or air conditioner and the outermost station on each line, compensation is needed to assure that all stations will receive equivalent total heating or cooling. This is achieved by a system of balancing dampers placed in the branch tubes at ground level. When the system is installed and first placed in operation, these dampers are adjusted individually (and then locked permanently in position) to give a progressive increase in airflow at each station further removed from the central unit. Thus, in the case of heating, the outermost stations receive maximum airflow at minimum temperature, while those closest to the furnace receive minimum airflow at maximum temperature. The same applies with relative temperatures reversed, in the case of cooling. The result is a complete balance in total heating and cooling delivered at each station.

Operating Costs

Experience on operating costs for the first installation of this equipment in Eastern Management Corporation's drive-in at Totowa, N.J., has fully substantiated the claims of less than two cents per night per car. On maintenance, the Jet-Heat furnace units themselves have required an average of less than one service call per furnace per year in domestic systems, where the duty cycle is 'round the clock. Operating at drive-ins for an average of less than one-fourth the domestic heating duty cycle, the units should easily surpass this record.

At the present time, all Jet-Heat system sales and installations are handled directly by the manufacturer, to insure proper adaptation of the equipment to local conditions. Quotations are based on a preliminary engineering survey to insure a sound basis for most economical pricing in each theatre. The nominal survey charge is applied to the purchase price if an order is placed. Engineering supervision is provided as part of the installation contract, and arrangements made with local contractors covering electrical work, trenching, and similar standard work required. Service arrangements, including training where needed, also are made through local heating and air conditioning contractors.

It will be interesting, indeed, to see what effect this new application of central heating and, more importantly, the advent of air conditioning, may prove to have on drive-in attendance and operation.

Heater Voltage Requirements

A Manufacturer Clarifies some of the Complex Theories Involved in Electric Car Heating System Installations

■ THERE HAS BEEN considerable misunderstanding regarding voltage and current requirements in heater installations. Although this involves the somewhat complex theory of polyphase electrical systems, the problem can be clarified up to a point.

Heater systems are installed in three-phase systems which may be one of two common configurations: (1) the wye (or star) connection, and (2) the delta (or mesh) connection. These connections are shown right:

By AL BOUDOURIS
President
EPRAD Company

Wye-Connected Heaters
Figure 1

Delta-Connected Heaters

The voltage across the feeder lines are 120° out of phase, and are assumed to be equal. This means that although they have equal measured voltages, the separate voltage alterations occur at different intervals so that no two line voltages are simultaneously maximum or minimum. This requires that we use vectors to determine the current and voltage relationships. Since the heaters are essentially resistive, we can assume that the voltages and corresponding currents are in phase. In this figure, the current through each line is equal to the current through the heater bank in series with it. However, the voltage must be represented vectorially:

Now if we wish to know the voltage between lines 1 and 2, we find that we must subtract the vector "C" from the vector "A." This is done as follows:

The voltage A-C is the voltage which exists between lines 1 and 2, and may be computed trigonometrically to show that the line voltage is 1.73 times the voltage across the heater bank. Now, consider the Delta connection:

The voltage across each heater bank is now equal to the line voltage (voltage between any two lines). If the heater bank loads are equal (balanced load), the currents A, B, and C are equal in magnitude, but differ in phase by 120°. The current through Line 1 is the vector difference between current "A" and "B." Thus:

By trigonometry, we find that the line current is 1.73 times the current through each heater bank. The total solution is as follows:

Now, if one heater bank should open, say heater bank "A," the vector "A" would go to zero, and the solution would be as follows:

Other unbalanced loads may be computed in like manner.

Heaters may also be connected in a 4-wire wye configuration, where the fourth wire is neutral (common):

In this configuration, the neutral is usually grounded, and carries no current if the loads A, B, and C are equal. If the loads are unbalanced, a current will flow through the neutral wire in proportion to the net unbalance. The line currents are equal to the respective heater bank currents, and the line-to-line voltage is equal to 1.73 times the heater-bank voltage. The line-to-neutral voltage is equal to the heater-bank voltage. Some heater installations may use a single-phase, 3-wire system. In this configuration, one wire is neutral.

The line-to-line voltage is double the line-to-neutral voltage. The line current is equal to the heater-bank current.

Fusing

A fuse is a protective device which is inserted in a line to prevent damaging currents to flow. Since heater resistances may fluctuate $\pm 10\%$ in manufacture, the fuse size should be approximately 25 percent greater than the computed maximum line current.

Wire Size

Wire size is based upon the safe load current for the particular installation conditions. It is the heating effect of a current passing through a conductor that is the ultimate consideration. The smaller the wire, the greater the resistance, and the greater the power (heat) dissipation in the wire.

For a direct burial installation, a wire size of 500 circular mils per ampere is considered the minimum safe limit, when using insulation of neoprene, polyethylene, or similar quality.

Assume that the computed line current is 160 amperes. The wire size would be $160 \times 500 = 80,000$ circular mils.

Wire size #1 (AWG) would be selected because it has a cross-sectional area of 83,700 circular mils (the next highest wire size). The resistance of this wire would be .118 ohms per 1000 feet at 40°F . When a current of 160 amperes is passed through 1000 feet of this wire (500 ft. run), the voltage drop is 19 volts, and the power loss in the wire is 3,040 watts. The line fuse should be 200 amperes (maximum capacity).

It is to be hoped that the foregoing simplified explanation of some of the principles involved in heater voltages will assist many exhibitors who have been perplexed in this respect while trying to master the problem.

Development of a model (Figure Three) opened up possibilities of just about any size recreation, entertainment, and trading center. By close examination of the model, one can readily visualize a scaled down version eliminating the mall and the stores at the front. The remaining stores would then all be under the roof deck ramps. Any further reduction in stores would again depend on the potential trading area, financial support, property availability, and other factors peculiar to the specific location.

Trading center developers of today should consult with a drive-in theatre design engineer to implement their ideas and to project their planning into a functional and positive development for the end result of a center truly giving the public maximum service and entertainment facilities.

Such developers should not make the mistake of adding a drive-in theatre as an afterthought, which is what happened, in general, in the case of the Dover Drive-In, with the result that many problems were encountered that could have been avoided through some careful planning.

Through the lesson of the Dover Drive-In, it has been possible to develop such a layout as that in Figure One, in which foreseeable difficulties have been anticipated, although individual tailoring is nonetheless essential at the time of construction.

One way in which we have been able to capitalize on the problems which arose at the Dover is in design of a mall-type layout for future proposed theatres of this kind. Department stores and smaller shops in the mall area would be accessible in various agreeable ways; on the other hand, the stores under the ramp area enjoy such advantages as rear truck delivery under cover, as well as excess storage under cover.

Lighting in the proposed layout has been directed away from the screen tower surface and the ramp area by means of the high department stores and the shops beneath; the problem would be further reduced, of course, by shielding parking lot lights properly.

FIGURE THREE: A model layout of Mr. Vogel's roof top drive-in, which has been displayed at an industry convention and has attracted wide interest both in and out of the industry.

Stereophonic Sound For Theatres

A Detailed Review of Stereophonic Sound Principles, Equipment, Utilization, Operation, and Maintenance

■ THIS ARTICLE IS PROMPTED by the thought that the exhibitor, disturbed by current events, may welcome a review of the principles of stereophonic sound and the necessary theatre equipments, so that he may intelligently assess his position in the business.

Looking Back

The motion picture industry was introduced to stereophonic sound in release print form in 1953 with the beginning of CinemaScope. In the following two or three years, approximately 4,000 theatres in the United States and Canada purchased and installed the equipment for exhibition of the CinemaScope type picture and the accompanying magnetic multiple-track stereophonic sound. Partly due to the exhibition innovations, those theatres which purchased the new equipments early, mostly paid off their initial investment with the increased business. Subsequently, principally due to exhibitor pressure, CinemaScope features were also released with single track photographic (optical) sound; as a result, 14,000 more theatres acquired the apparatus for presenting the picture portion but ignored completely the improved reproduction features of magnetic stereophonic sound and the chain reaction was triggered. Producers, with the exception of 20th Century-Fox, ceased making stereophonic sound prints, or made them in such small quantity that they were available only to a few first-run houses on certain types of pictures.

Experience and observation have disclosed that many theatres equipped with magnetic sound reproducing equipment do not bother to maintain their investment in operating condition and, therefore, exhibit the photographic sound track versions of features which were also released in stereophonic sound form. Much of theatre management did not consider it advantageous, even over the long term, to spend money for modifications or new equipment in order to keep up with new features, apparently reasoning that the public is not seriously concerned about the quality of the presentation. Theatre managers devoted considerable time to the popcorn and candybar operation probably because the results could be seen in black and white, although house cleanliness became more of a problem. In retrospect, knowing that the customer is initially attracted by the entertainment offered and expects comfortable and pleasant surroundings, one wonders whether the industry might have done better by paying a greater percentage of time to the method and quality of presentation of the product.

Obviously, all the foregoing is history. What about the future?

Looking Ahead

It is now well acknowledged that television is the real competitor of motion picture films in theatres. We must first face the fact that television and the motion picture industry deal with the same commodity—entertainment, education, or escape, in the form of “moving pictures with sound.” The same stories are available to each medium, as are the same artists and settings. The only fundamental differences are where the commodity is delivered to the consumer and how it is presented; “where” is largely determined by “how.” If we recognize that the principal competitive advantage of the motion picture industry resides in the manner and degree of quality of presentation — story staging; large, clear, bright picture images, free of flicker; realistic, intelligible sound with appropriate music and without foreign noises or distortion; pleasant surroundings — it is manifestly clear that the commodity must be shown in theatres or their equivalent, and that we must always be alert to take advantage of every improvement in presentation and make this known to our customers.

In 1953, the industry led all other entertainment media in technical matters; today it is largely behind, with a seeming willingness to “let the other fellow do it first.” There are some who believe that the exhibitor may have misjudged the public’s perception when he said, “The public doesn’t know the difference.”

Stereophonic Era

Today, stereophonic sound is in the home on magnetic tape and on records, it is on radio, and it is on television. The material in trade journals and the extent of advertising in all media, is sufficient to prove that “stereophonic” is a word widely known by non-technical people, even though the principles involved are not generally understood and a great deal of the equipment is executed improperly and installed badly. How much longer shall we wait before we also take full advantage of one of the aspects of superior presentation, stereophonic sound?

The television industry advertises and exploits program material aggressively, mentioning each feature and novelty. Today, although stereophonic sound is otherwise generally widely publicized, this added feature of motion picture exhibition, when available, is not mentioned, or is relegated to the smallest print in the advertising copy. Some day an enterprising television advertiser may startle us with something like the following: "The John Doe Show with Stereophonic Sound — You can't hear this in your local theatre."

Exhibitor The Pacesetter

Many exhibitors whose theatres are equipped for stereophonic sound complain that they cannot get a sufficient number of prints from the producers to justify the equipment and maintenance cost; exhibitors whose theatres are not equipped state that there is little reason to install stereophonic sound equipment when most producers do not make this kind of product. Manifestly, progress is stalemated when each segment of the industry waits for the other.

The exhibitor is the producer's customer, and it seems reasonable that the latter would provide stereophonic sound prints if theatre management made known their wishes and, further, a sufficient number of additional theatres would equip for stereophonic sound so as to warrant the added cost of release prints. There are manifestations in Hollywood that the producers are now taking the initiative by currently making more pictures with stereophonic sound than in the last year. Exhibitors have been through a bad period in which there were no clear cut signs to guide them but the low point apparently has been passed and theatre management can again feel and display the enthusiasm which is so necessary in show business.

Mag-Optical Prints

In the past year, the form of release print known as "Mag-optical" has been issued. These prints carry both magnetic stereophonic and optical track sound on CinemaScope film and with a CinemaScope film image. Mag-optical prints, being a combination of stereophonic and single track sound, eliminate the necessity for two kinds of release prints, thereby reducing the cost of manufacture and distribution, making it more feasible, economically, to provide magnetic stereophonic type releases in greater quantity. These prints are useful to the exhibitor in that the photographic sound track provides protection, should the stereophonic equipment become unexpectedly defective and also, since only one kind of release print is needed, copies are more readily available.

PART I:

STEREOPHONIC PRINCIPLES

Monaural Sound

All of the reproduced sounds to which the public has been exposed prior to the commercialization of stereophonic sound are known technically as monaural methods or, more descriptively, one-eared methods. This is true of records, radio, television and motion pictures; the latter uses a single sound track commonly called optical sound but more correctly, photographic sound. The effect of one-eared methods of recording and reproducing sound is as though the listener were transported back to the time of the performance, placed at the position occupied by the microphone and had one ear plugged up. If the microphone happened to be placed to the right side of the performance, say an orchestra, then the listener would hear in either case predominantly the right side of the performance. The thoughtful reader will recognize that with one-eared recording or reproducing methods, it is impossible to give the same effect to an audience as they would have if they were seated before the actual performance; this analytic conclusion leads us to the concept of stereophonic sound.

Stereophonic Sound

It is the intent of stereophonic sound methods to recreate the original performance before a new audience at some later time, in true space relationships as though the artists were actually on stage. In the motion picture case, stereophonic recording is used to reproduce behind the screen all the sounds of the original performance in suitable fashion so that the audience, by two-ear hearing, has the same impression as when seated in the auditorium with the original performance. If the reader wishes he may demonstrate for himself the difference between one-eared and two-eared hearing by alternately covering and uncovering one ear while listening to someone talking, particularly within a group of people. The experimenter will notice that with one-eared hearing it is more difficult to understand what is being said, the quality of the sound is different, and the location of the sound is more difficult to perceive.

Recording and Reproducing

To do an exact job of recording and reproducing sounds with stereophonic methods requires a very great number of microphones placed before the original performance, much like an invisible and sound transparent curtain recording the sounds from each one of the microphones individually on separate sound tracks and reproducing them subsequently with a like number of loud-speakers, arranged in a similar curtain before the new audience. For large screen use it has been found that the minimum number of microphones, recording channels, sound tracks, reproducing systems, and loud-speakers is three in number. Three recording and reproducing channels cover the screen action quite adequately and recreate the original sounds realistically at the lowest possible cost. It should be understood that more than three channels, such as used in current road show exhibitions, will do a better job, but the expenses of road show presentation are not yet justified in the smaller theatres.

Summary

We may list the features of stereophonic sound as follows:

- (1) Visible position of sound sources on the screen are matched by the direction from which the reproduced sound is heard, rather than all the reproduced sounds coming from one place.
- (2) Changes in sound, as actors or sound sources move about or go more or less distant from the camera, are very similar to our experiences in life. In the case of musical recordings, the musicians seem to be placed as they would be in an orchestra.
- (3) The acoustic effects of a situation in which the action is taking place are well reproduced and life-like.
- (4) The quality, or faithfulness, or the recording and reproduction of the original sound is greatly improved.

To provide stereophonic sound reproduction for the motion picture audience required the use of three sound tracks on the release film. A fourth track has been added to stereophonic sound release prints which is used at appropriate times to enhance the audience participation in the presentation, to increase the illusion of certain scenes, or to create special effects for dramatic purposes. The signals from the three principal tracks on the release film are reproduced by three loud-speakers behind the screen and the signals from the fourth sound track are reproduced by a multiplicity of loud-speakers placed around the auditorium, so arranged

Century's Model J Projector

A Leading American Manufacturer is Introducing Interchangeable 70/35mm Projection and Sound Equipment Having Unique Features

■ THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY has, for some-time, observed other forms of entertainment gradually become more popular than motion pictures. Part of this depreciated popularity may have been caused by lack of foresight to continue aggressive research and development toward overcoming the physical limitations of the camera, film, and projector systems. The success of such new and complicated motion picture systems as Cinerama, Cinemiracle, Horizontal Vistavision, 3-D, and similar attempts has pointed the way to a renewed vigor in the industry portending greater things to come.

Among the more recent developments which has proven its value is the use of 70mm motion picture film with its larger picture area and its expanded six channel sound reproduction. Obviously, larger films and multiple sound channels require larger, heavier equipment to project the picture satisfactorily with optimum brightness and to reproduce the sound with clarity.

To that end, Century Projector Corporation dedicated its every effort and talent to the development and manufacture of projection and sound reproducing equipment to fulfill the most exacting specifications, with the highest quality of picture and sound possible within the limitations of the art itself.

The result is the new Century Model J Projector. This projector has the familiar physical aspect of its predecessors—the well-known and proven Model C, Model CC, Model H, and Model HH 35mm Projectors. The designs are also based upon the experience gained in the design of all of the successful projection systems enumerated above, plus about three years cooperative development on wide film projectors with 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation.

The new Model J 70/35mm Projector is the only American made equipment available and follows the time proven design of having the projector mechanism, optical sound reproducer, magnetic sound reproducer, and upper and lower magazines in separate units, thereby adding strength, stability, ease of installation, simplified servicing, and the possible expansion of presently operating projection and sound equipment through modernization in progressive steps, if that appears feasible as the wider film programs enlarge their operations.

An important consideration which has been carefully thought out is the possible adaptation to other film dimensions and processes. Each part of the Model J has been designed, and conversion units are already available for, film dimensions and processes not as yet ready for theatre presentation. Century has taken a long look forward to analyze possible future requirements for projection equipment. The Model J is the answer to an equipment prepared for almost any foreseeable expansion for the present 70mm and 35mm film dimensions, as well as other possible refinements.

The Model J Mechanism

The Model J mechanism is designed to project either 70mm or standard 35mm film. Special attention has been given to make the changeover from one film dimension to the other simple. The whole change can be made within a minute or so (with experience, within seconds). This means that 35mm standard film can be projected and, from the time the tail end of this film runs out to the time of starting threading 70mm film, only seconds will elapse. It is, therefore, entirely safe and reasonable to run a 70mm feature film with 35mm news and short subjects.

The Intermittent Movement

The intermittent movement, as usual, is the heart of any motion picture projector. The Century 70/35mm intermittent movement has all of the accuracy and stamina of years of experience in the design and manufacture of such units for commercial, as well as specialized, applications.

The standard 70/35mm movement is a geneva starwheel and cam design, but of larger dimensions, larger shafts, larger cam pin, larger starwheel, and larger radii than any known projector for these applications (almost 100 percent heavier). Each part is the result of experimentation to find the right materials, weights, hardness, and finish to give undeviating steadiness to the picture with a reasonably long operating life.

The double intermittent sprocket should receive particular mention because of the exhaustive research and testing it has received. Life tests have been conducted on these sprockets for the past two and half years. They are made of special duraluminum having a hardness at the wearing surfaces harder than the steel of standard sprockets.

The sprockets are easily changed without removing the movement from the mechanism. They can be reversed, also, in the mechanism, and by a unique design of hub contour the concentricity of the rims and the positioning of the teeth are assured. Screen measurements indicate that picture steadiness is equal to, or better, than the best 35mm performance.

No expense has been spared in making this 70/35mm intermittent out-perform any device of its kind. It is designed specifically for use with larger films at normal and increased film speeds.

All other sprockets in this projector are double (70/35mm) and made of hardened steel. The diameter and tooth shape of each sprocket has been designed for the particular job it has to do. Each sprocket is, therefore, expected to last a long time and to contribute to long film life. There has been much discussion with many pros and cons relative to the "correct" sprocket dimensions for optimum results. Century believes, as it has for a number of years, that there is a fine balance of design practice which dictates the exact size and shape of every sprocket for the most economical service at the highest quality performance. Century sprockets are designed under the strict adherence to these principles, and any deviation from these designs could contribute nothing but depreciated results.

Pad Rollers

Each pad roller associated with each sprocket is of the double roller type, mounted and clearly marked so that the changeover from 70mm to 35mm operation is accomplished by rotating the assembly a half turn. There are three such pad rollers in the complete projector and the change can be made in less than one second per roller. A quick glance (after threading the projector) clearly indicates whether or not each roller is in proper position to run the film selected.

FIGURE THREE: The rear view of the Century Model R-31 70/35mm magnetic sound reproducer showing the vertical drive shaft and gear for the film sprocket, two flywheels and arm supports for the hydraulic flutter suppressor, the four-channel and six-channel terminal blocks with two cable connectors for the separate sound systems.

The Film Trap

The film trap shoes are hard polished chromium permanently held in an exact contour insuring the proper curvature of the film. The complete film trap is water cooled down to the mounting of the shoes, which are insulated from the water cell to prevent the condensation of water on any metal part actually touching the film and yet providing for the absorption of all radiant heat transmitted from the arc lamp. To the most minute serration of the film trap, the design prevents unwanted light reflections from the water cell chamber and yet accepts all unwanted radiant heat without interference to the useful light at the aperture.

The same careful physical design also applies to either the 70mm or the 35mm film trap. Each film trap with its properly curved shoes slides out of and into the mounting on large accurately positioned gibs and is firmly and accurately held in operating position. An interesting observation of the film trap (and film gate also) discloses that they may be changed easily to operate with almost any film dimension.

A word regarding water cooled film traps is not amiss in this discussion. There are two kinds of water cooling in prevalent use. These should be classified as water cooled heat shields and water cooled film traps. The object of water cooled heat shields, used on most water cooled projectors, is to absorb most of the stray heat going into the projector. These shields have nothing whatever to do with the heat which destroys the motion picture film nor the operating temperature of the aperture plate.

The Century 70/35mm film traps are designed to take all possible damaging heat away from the film, allowing only that heat which is inseparable from the light to impinge on the projected picture area. Century believes that, within the limits of available air blowers or economical air velocities obtainable for motion picture projectors, that there can not be any advantage in air which may circulate past the film as it is being projected. Instead, it is believed that any air which may circulate past the aperture merely serves the purpose to cool the aperture plate and that an efficient water cooled aperture plate, as incorporated in the standard line of Century water cooled projectors, and this new 70/35mm projector, reduce the damaging heat on the film to an absolute minimum without direct mechanical contact of cooled

A Survey Of Projection Practices

Visiting Nearly 500 Roofed Theatres and Over 200 Drive-Ins, An Industry Organization Recommends Projection Improvements

■ THE THEATRE LIAISON ACTIVITY has gathered facts which make this report important to everyone concerned with the overall health of the industry. However, this summary treats only of the important first-run theatres in large cities.

In 74% of these theatres optimum focus could not be obtained; 63 percent of this number were due to mechanical misalignment (such misalignment also may contribute to shortened print life). These were corrected on the spot. The remainder were due to worn parts or to sub-par optical components. Such conditions were reported to executive management. Management's interest in the reports indicated that these recommendations would not be ignored.

Precision gauges and lens performance test film were used to determine and to correct these conditions. These tools were developed by the Research Council engineering staff and will be made available to theatre technicians at lowest possible cost. It may be expected that conditions causing less than optimum picture sharpness will be corrected in other theatres throughout the world as these tools are put to use.

Screen Brightness

In 69 percent of the theatres visited, recommendations were made to correct undesirable screen brightness levels and undesirable brightness distribution to the various seating areas. The harm this condition is doing to

By MOTION PICTURE RESEARCH COUNCIL, INC.

• The information contained herein has been assembled by the MPRC Theatre Liaison Staff as its Second Report, issued a few months ago, on the Theatre Liaison Program. The first report was issued in December, 1957, and, in the interim, over 700 theatres have been visited in over 100 localities. The percentage of large city, first run theatres contacted has increased over that in the First Report as emphasis again has been placed on these situations because of their revenue importance. Figures represent conditions "as found" at the time that the theatre was surveyed.

proper presentation of product cannot be exaggerated. These conditions would not exist if the proper type screen were properly installed, and adequate arc lamp equipment used.

In all these cases, facts about screen characteristics and proper installation were discussed with technical personnel and with owners and executive management. Articles and charts, emphasizing the importance of these considerations have been widely circulated by the Council theatre staff.

Wrong Size Lenses

In 43 percent of these theatres, recommendations were made to procure lenses of a different focal length than that being used in order to show either anamorphic or regular product to better advantage. In most cases where wrong size lenses were used, intended picture information was being eliminated (sometimes drastically) by use of undersize apertures which compensated the error in lens focal length for a given picture size.

Owners and executive management were very interested to learn of these conditions. As a means of focusing attention on this problem, a scaled chart was incorporated in an all purpose projector alignment film developed by the Council. This chart indicates at a glance precisely how much of the intended picture information is being lost in projection. The widespread use of this film will be encouraged in every way possible.

Print Life

One of the important causes of shortened print life is attributed to the use of relatively small diameter sprockets. The use of sprockets of this type is greatly affecting print life. The Council theatre staff has urged replacement of undersize sprockets wherever they were found.

Another important cause of shortened print life was found to be improper alignment of the projector film path. Gauges to facilitate this alignment will be made available to theatre technicians. They will be described in articles, and technical personnel in large theatre circuits will be advised of their availability.

Sound

Many of the more enterprising exhibitors complained that too few stereophonic sound prints were being made available. Some expressed the opinion that the increasing public interest in stereo sound used in home sound systems, radio, and some TV programs, should be considered seriously by both producers and exhibitors.

Conditions of Prints

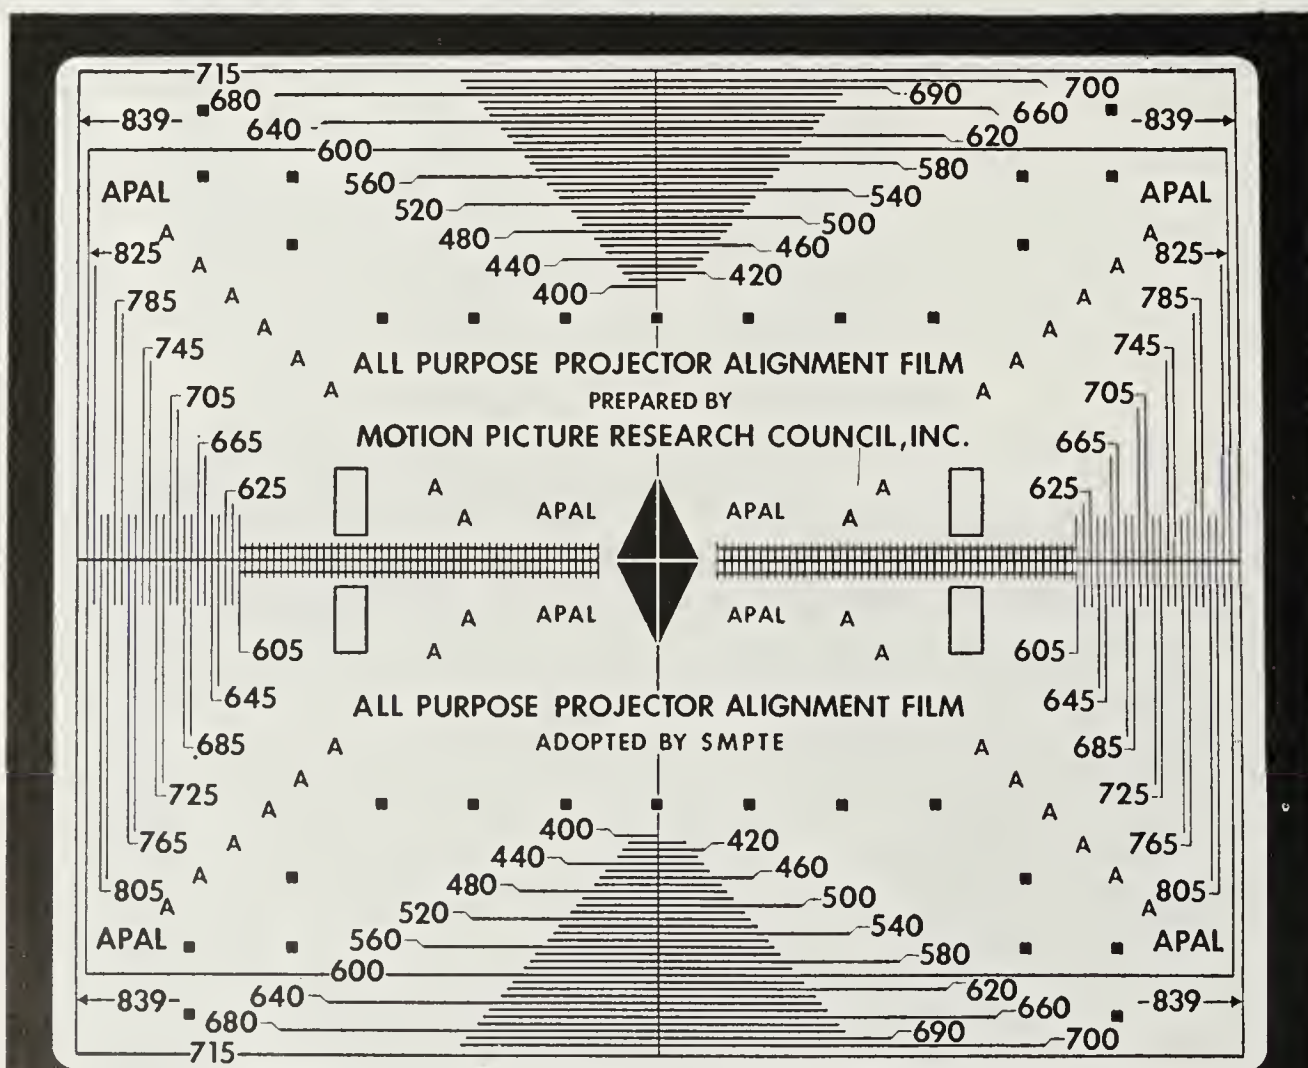

Many complaints have been made to the Council theatre staff by theatre management and projectionists about the condition of prints delivered to the theatre. These have been especially common among subsequent run theatres and drive-ins. Most common complaints are:

1. Scratched prints
2. Unrepaired damaged splices
3. Damaged leaders, leaders of improper length (footage missing) leaders not spliced to reel, and on some occasions, missing leaders
4. Damaged, bent reels
5. Damaged containers (especially the cardboard type recently put in use)

These widespread complaints point to improper handling and inadequate inspection in the exchanges, and necessitate extra booth time in the theatre for inspection and repair.

Drive-In Screen Brightness

Screen brightness is the principal concern of this type of exhibition. Fifty-seven percent

Projection And Sound In Australia

Westrex Australia Has Installed Numerous Interesting Devices In Some of the Largest Outdoor Theatres in the Commonwealth

■ AUSTRALIA, next to the United States and Canada, has more drive-in theatres per head population than any other country in the world. Over 50 units are in operation to date, and a number are under construction. The majority of the drive-ins are operated by circuits, but independents have good representation. Generally speaking, the service offered by Australian drive-ins is of the highest standard. Most are well constructed and represent a high capital outlay.

The largest drive-in, the Metro Twin at Clayton, Victoria, accommodates 1,500 cars. Next in line is the 1,320-car sister Metro situated at Chullora, New South Wales.

Setting the standard for drive-in sound and projection in Australia, Westrex Australia has installed equipment in many of the outdoor theatres, among them all the Metro units in four states. Screen sizes are standard for each Metro, 115 feet by 50 feet with projection distance of approximately 440 feet.

The twin units are actually two separate drive-ins on the one lot. A complete duplication of projection booth equipment, screen, speakers, etc., serves the second field. In this way, programs can be staggered, with four sessions conducted each evening for a total of over 3,000 cars.

The Australian made Westrex AE326 In-Car Speaker Units are used in each Westrex equipped drive-in. The number of Westrex 75 watt unit amplifiers in appropriate cabinets used is dependent on the number of cars to service. Projection, arc lamp, and arc supply equipment is selected to suit the various screen sizes and other factors.

BELOW, a 350 watt unit housed in the Westrex AE299 and AE322 cabinet with power level indicator meters, ramp emergency switching, radio tuner, etc. Right, top and bottom, open view of the AE 326 speaker and the same mounted, on the Westrex two-way drive-in junction box.

Sound System

Westrex AE326 photo pre-amplifiers are used in each case and mounted in their associated AE261 cabinets, one for each machine to allow individual volume control. The AE236 Cathode follower output is fed to the main power amplifiers via the film, non-sync. announce switching unit.

Each power amplifier delivers 75 watts of clean audio power to the ramp switching unit incorporated in the main control cabinet. Westrex allows .5 watts per field speaker when calculating power output requirements. One floor mounted cabinet, the AE324 or AE322, incorporates the entire switching and monitoring system. Each power amplifier output is fed into this panel and a power output meter meters each amplifier. In the event of failure of any one power amplifier, emergency switching is provided to allow the then inoperative ramps to be switched on to any one of the remaining amplifiers without apparent drop in sound level. Up to 16 ramps may be controlled and switched in this way.

A continuous audio sound source is provided also in the main cabinet. This available audio signal is used when testing field speaker units during non-screening testing. As the number of speakers vary, Westrex incorporates impedance balance controls in the main speaker distribution panel to allow any given amplifier to be matched to any given number of speakers.

Three speed non-sync. units have been supplied in each case, plus the added convenience of superimposing facilities, allowing microphone announcements to be superimposed.

Field Speakers

The housing of each Westrex drive-in speaker unit is constructed of shockproof die-cast aluminium in two pieces. They are painted in two-tone baked hammertone finish. The actual speaker unit is enclosed in an alkathene envelope to combat moisture and dust penetration, and it is held in place between the two cast housing units in a pre-aligned position under pressure, with a rubber cushion when two castings are bolted together. This affords easy replacement in the event of failure. The three bolts holding the housing pieces are cadmium plated to eliminate possible chemical action and electrolysis from taking place. The heads are recessed to discourage tampering by patrons. A recessed volume control knob is mounted at the front housing to prevent possible damage. The concession call switch is also mounted as above.

In Australia, much trouble has been experienced with noisy volume controls, but Westrex developed one means of combating this problem. Each volume control is treated before installation and has proved to be entirely noise free.

The Westrex AE327 Speaker Junction Box is mounted on top of the two inch diameter pipe standard. This junction box accommodates the transformer for two speakers, together with concession light equipment and bezels. A single holding bolt is used to hold the cover on the junction box. When this cover is removed, all wiring is accessible. Downpost lighting is efficient and hooded, so that light does not escape to indicate the concession call bezel. Invariably, several "extra" speakers are provided in the drive-in. These range from the concealed diffusion types used in the ceiling of the snack bar to specially adapted modified in-car units for patio and playground areas.

Field Wiring

Each Westrex equipped drive-in is planned thoroughly on the drawing board before the installation is begun. Wiring of the speaker and concession facilities warrants special attention. In Australia, Westrex uses 2-2 pair cables to each ramp and subsequent speaker posts. One provides sound, the other lighting.

Arc Lamp and Supply Equipment

The smaller drive-ins with CinemaScope screens measuring up to 40 feet wide, use the standard Westrex 14 inch Arc Lamp at an arc current of approximately 80 amps, supplied by Westrex 752 type selenium rectifiers. The average 500-car units, generally with a screen 80 feet wide, invariably use the BTH Supra Arc Lamp, supplied with up to 120 amps from either selenium rectifiers or motor generators.

The giant screens, measuring up to 120 feet wide, demand the finest in lighting and projection equipment. Ashcraft Super Cinex Arc Lamps used in conjunction with Westrex multi phase 180 amp per unit rectifiers operating at 165 amps, together with Century CC4W Water Cooled Special Curved Gate Drive-In Projectors, attain a light speed of F1.6. The screen results compare very favourably with fine indoor theatres.

Cinemeccanica Victoria X Equipment

A Leading European Manufacturer is Marketing 70/35mm All Purpose Projection and Sound Units

Introduction

CINEMECCANICA OF MILAN, ITALY is, and has long been, recognized as one of the leading manufacturers of motion picture equipment in Europe, as well as one of the oldest concerns in the field, having been formed before the advent of sound pictures. When the first talking picture was introduced in this country, Cinemeccanica promptly undertook the manufacture of sound equipment covering the complete line of electronics and all associated components.

The products of Cinemeccanica include 35mm professional and portable motion picture equipment, as well as all types of lighting equipment from Mazda lamphouses to high-intensity reflector arc lamphouses. The firm also markets sound screens to fit all requirements and all accessory items used by theatres throughout the world.

The firm has world wide sales and service coverage through progressive distributors. With the recent appointment of Cinematograph International to this roster, it can now render representation and service in this country.

The Victoria X

Cinemeccanica's new combination Victoria X 70/35mm projector has been time tested in Europe in many installations. The unit required many years of research, engineering, common sense "know-how," and endurance trials to achieve acceptable end results. The basic engineering principles in its design represent the conclusions drawn from an extensive study by leading European projector design engineers to meet present day standards of the various recognized technical societies throughout the world.

The Victoria X projector head is designed with both magnetic and optical sound integrally built-in. The magnetic sound head contains a ten track magnetic pick up for reproducing either 70mm six-track or 35mm four-track recording. A unique feature permits a very rapid change from 70mm to 35mm in one minute, without removal of sprocket pad rollers.

All feed sprockets are large in diameter giving a large wrap to the film with ample sprocket hole engagement. Oil pressure is fed by a pump located in the base of the projector head, which pressure feeds oil to every moving part and eliminates hazards of splash system.

Special aluminum alloy intermittent sprockets are favorable for rapid acceleration and deceleration of same. The aperture is cooled by both water and air, thus preventing any possible chance of the film buckling through the heat.

The film gate and runner plate is of very rugged construction, specially designed with a gradual bend in the film track before the aperture, in order to maintain a perfectly flat film surface and a rock steady picture.

The Victoria X projector head is driven by a single rugged three phase motor through a specially designed clutch which permits a speed change from 30 frames to 24 frames whenever required. The take up is driven by a separate three-phase motor situated in the projector base, while a third motor drives a filtered air blower which circulates air around and past the aperture. All gears and shafts are designed with parallel axis to run smoothly and quietly.

The projector is mounted on a specially designed base which permits a projection angle tilt of from five degrees up to 20 degrees down.

The optical sound system incorporates an eddy current stabilizing flywheel with a dashpot damper. The flutter content does not exceed one tenth of one percent, is considerably better than established standards. The optical preamplifier is mounted in the front of the projector base, which provides a very short cable run from the photo cell. A large one piece glass door encloses the entire projector mechanism, giving the unit a streamlined and attractive appearance.

The Victoria X, with the complete 10 track magnetic and optical sound system and the Cinemeccanica Zenith #450 high intensity 18 inch reflector arc lamp, also offers flexibility of the projector which will permit its use with standard sound systems and arc lamps of all makes.

This is the smoothest and most quietly running 70mm projector, providing the finest projection and sound, witnessed by this writer, who departed from Milan recently convinced of Cinemeccanica's success in this field.

that the audience is surrounded, or encompassed with sound.

Production Problems

The technical problems of bringing four-track stereophonic sound to the theatre on a single piece of 35mm were many. The solution was found in the use of magnetic recording methods and a change in the film perforation location and dimension. The use of magnetic tracks in theatres has been attacked in some trade magazines implying serious distortion characteristics and frightful handling problems; most of these have been half truths written by well intentioned but misinformed individuals. The published aspersions cannot be reconciled with the fact that magnetic recordings on tapes and stripes are used for all original recordings in the record industry, most program material used on radio, the best professional recordings available for home reproduction, machine tool control in industrial plants, the storage of important information in computers and business offices, all original recordings and re-recordings in major motion picture studios, dictating machines, and television pictures.

Exhibition's Failure

Motion picture exhibition is the only entertainment medium, other than live performances, which does not use magnetically recorded and reproduced sound to its fullest extent.

What has been described in this Part is legitimate stereophonic sound recording, properly executed for reproduction in the theatre, and should not be confused with what is known as "Perspecta Sound" which is an artificial, or synthetic, method of stereophonic sound. Stereophonic sound is, of course, another thing entirely.

THIS is the Ampex coupling unit to replace optical amplifiers, reproducing optical sound track through a magnetic sound system.

THE AMPEX wall mounted projector changeover and fader cabinet, above, is another part of the stereophonic sound system's important elements.

PART II: STEREOPHONIC EQUIPMENT

In the following it is assumed that the theatre is now equipped with the auxiliary anamorphic lens systems, aperture plates, and wide screen.

Aperture Plates

Because of a fairly recent theatre survey, it is appropriate to suggest that the size of the aperture plates be reconsidered. It was found that many plates were grossly undersized to compensate for incorrect lens focal lengths, the combination resulting in the loss of considerable picture on both sides and top and bottom. Another poor practice found in the field is that of using too small an aspect ratio in the aperture plate and on the screen. By aspect ratio is meant the ratio of the width of the picture to the height which, in the case of the CinemaScope release, is 2.35 to 1. In other words, the picture is 2.35 times as wide as the height. There are many instances where, for expediency or lowest cost, the picture aspect ratio is as low as 2 to 1 and it is quite clear that much picture information is lost which the producer intended should be seen.

Whenever possible, the screen height for CinemaScope should remain the same as for the so-called flat picture and the width of the screen increased proportionately to show as much of the CinemaScope width as can be done.

Screen Frame

To obtain the maximum presentation value from wide screen picture, the image should occupy as nearly as possible the entire end of the auditorium but, when this is not practical, the use of side drapings can make it appear as though the screen were the true auditorium limits. Many exhibitors want to hold to the traditional proscenium arch; they should realize that while the proscenium is suitable for stage plays and the like, it is not truly functional for the presentation of motion pictures. Basically, the image on a screen is on one plane in which distance or perspective is implied by various devices; in some regards, as an art form, it may be analytically compared with still photographs or paintings which are mounted or framed in some suitable fashion so as to set them apart from the surroundings, but not to detract from the picture being displayed. The artist knows that he can use a frame of such visual dominance that the frame becomes the center of interest rather than the picture. Analogously, the proscenium arch is a frame for the presentation but the usual shape and decoration is so eye catching as to distract the viewer from the picture being shown. The exhibitor would do better to extend the screen beyond the proscenium arch and drape it in such a fashion that it becomes a part of the theatre enclosure even though they may lose a few rows of the less desirable front seating area. Theatres modernized in this fashion present a wholly new and pleasant face to the customer. To obtain the best possible side-to-side focus and light distribution, a wide screen should be slightly curved. A convenient rule specifies the screen curve by using the projection throw as the radius of a circle of which the screen is one segment. If necessary, for structural reasons, the screen may be installed slightly flatter than the rule suggests, but great care should be exercised in this respect.

With a truly wide screen the advantages and values of stereophonic sound become much more apparent, so that the story presentation is considerably enhanced.

Test Films

Test films are available from the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers and the Motion Picture Research Council, which are helpful in adjusting the screen size and in calculating correct screen light.

Sprockets

Stereophonic sound and Mag-optical release prints are on film with perforations different from what has been used in the past. For either kind of release print, the projector must be equipped with certain new sprockets, rollers, and picture gate apparatus available from the various manufacturers. Some theatres have had their old sprockets machined or reworked by local shops so that they would fit the CinemaScope perforations and others have obtained modified sprockets from a variety of sources. Although these reworked sprockets will pull the film and apparently operate satisfactorily, they do damage film more than is necessary.

The best sprockets are those which have been designed specifically for CinemaScope film in which the diameter of the wheel has been chosen larger than previously, which is found to increase the life of prints by reducing perforation damage. Since most of the sprockets in projection machines have been used for a good portion of their useful life, it is best to replace with new, properly designed items.

For those who are interested, the base diameter of the better sprockets is 0.950 to 0.953 inches whereas the older type sprockets did not exceed a diameter of 0.945 inches, and there are many which are smaller. New idlers and rollers are required because the picture image is closer to the perforations on CinemaScope type release prints and the old style parts damage the edges of the image.

Magnetic Advantages

As we have learned, legitimate stereophonic sound reproduction requires a multiplicity of sound tracks; in this case, three or four. To obtain this many tracks on a standard release film of 35mm width, advantage was taken of the benefits of magnetic sound which are: (1) higher quality of reproduction, particularly noticeable in the high frequencies; (2) less background noise during the quiet passages; (3) simplicity of equipment in that the magnetic pick-up head replaces the exciter lamps, optical barrels, photo cells, and coupling devices, all of

Sound Reproducer

The use of magnetic sound tracks does require a new sound reproducer. The reproducer is a simple device which is placed on the projector between the upper magazine and the picture head. This reproducer requires no drive mechanism since the film is pulled through from the upper magazine by the projector sprockets.

With magnetic sound, recordings are printed on release film so that the sound corresponding to the picture in the gate is located at the point of magnetic pick-up in the new sound head. The film distance between the picture and the corresponding sound is 28 frames; the latter being displaced towards the tail of the reel rather than the head, as with optical sound. Each manufacturer supplies spacers or other devices such as movable rollers, by which the mechanical distance may be adjusted to 28 frames or more.

Sound Head Spacing

Although it is the function of the installation engineer to space correctly this sound head, it is appropriate at this point to mention that adjustment can be made for a long throw house. For example, if the picture and sound heads were displaced exactly 28 frames the sound would be in synchronism with the picture at the screen and, if it is desired to have the sound in synchronism somewhere back in the theatre at the most used seating location, then it is necessary to increase the distance between the sound pick-up point and the picture aperture. Each additional frame of spacing added to the 28 frame normal value moves the point of synchronization 46 feet further into the auditorium. Suppose that the best point for synchronization between the picture and the sound in a particular theatre was 100 feet from the screen, then the film should be threaded in the projector so that the distance between the sound take-off point and the projector aperture was 30 frames. In such a case, the installation should be made with a 30 frame displacement so that the projectionist always threads the print correctly.

All magnetic sound heads are arranged so that non-magnetic prints need not be threaded through the magnetic mechanism. It is not possible with all photographic sound heads, but whenever it can be done, magnetic prints should be threaded around the optical parts. Illustrations on Page 50 show some of the kinds of sound heads available from different manufacturers.

Amplifiers

It is quite apparent that now having the means to pull the film and get the sound signals from the sound tracks, we must have the means to amplify these signals and reproduce them in the auditorium. With a multiple track system, we require separate amplifiers to amplify the signals from each one of the tracks. There are a variety of ways in which this has been done.

One of the most common methods provides a group of four amplifiers which are alternately switched by the changeover mechanism from one projector sound head to the other. These are known as pre-amplifiers at the output of which is a fader used to adjust the loudness in the auditorium from all tracks simultaneously, and sometimes a booster amplifier.

Next in the amplifying system are power-amplifiers which supply enough energy to drive three loud-speakers placed behind the screen. An arrangement is usually made by means of which the fourth or special effects track (properly known as surround track) is amplified through the optical sound system already installed and whose output is connected, by a switch, to the surround loud-speakers in the auditorium—those speakers on the sides and rear wall of the auditorium used for special effects and enhancement of the sound coming from the screen. The use of a single set of pre-amplifiers for both machines suffers from one fault in that magnetic reproducing heads are seldom exactly balanced, so that it is almost impossible to adjust the amplifiers to reproduce equally well from both machines. The regular optical sound system is used conventionally for single track optical release prints.

The system just described is the lowest in cost; it will require more adjustment and maintenance as it is used. For these reasons, and to obtain consistently good results with the least amount of time for adjustment during service calls, it is strongly recommended that theatres install a system using a separate set of pre-amplifiers for each projection machine. With such an arrangement, the service engineer always can obtain a loudness and quality balance between the sound tracks with a minimum of fuss and effort.

The reader will have noticed that considerable emphasis was placed on the item of balance between the sound tracks. The producer exercises considerable control during the recording and re-recording of sound in the making of release prints to maintain a uniform performance from all sound tracks and unless the last link in the chain, the theatre equipment, is well adjusted as to loudness and quality, the realistic values of stereophonic sound are considerably degraded.

Optical Equipment

In a great many cases, the optical equipment in use is of old vintage, quite obsolete and probably needing considerable and continual attention and repair. In this connection, the exhibitor has two choices: he may buy a system which includes four completely new amplifier channels, which will reproduce the stereophonic sound properly, or, he may take advantage of a recent development in which one manufacturer has provided a small item which completely replaces the optical system amplifiers, if a four-channel magnetic system is purchased. The device in the projector modifies the electrical signals from the photographic sound reproducer so that they look like signals from a magnetic head reproducer and it is, therefore, perfectly feasible to reproduce the op-

PROJECTION AND SOUND SYSTEMS

TRY THE NEW CENTURY PROJECTOR

... you will be ahead with CENTURY for years to come!

The NEW CENTURY projectors have more desirable features than any other equipment. You will find no "gadget improvements" on CENTURY equipment—everything is scientifically arrived at—to give you full dimensional reproduction of picture and sound, with trouble-free operation.

HIGH EFFICIENCY MECHANISMS. CENTURY projectors require almost no maintenance. They contain fewer parts (10 gears where others require up to 23) in simple arrangement so that stress and wear are at a minimum. The ingenious design of the main drive shaft eliminates the pinion and stud unit of the soundhead coupling and provides a more positive trouble-free drive. Fewer gears and shafts mean less trouble, lower maintenance, less vibration, sharper pictures ... finer projection.

CLEAN, TROUBLE-FREE OPERATION. CENTURY has reduced lubrication headaches. There are no oil sprays or oil baths to mess up film and projection room. Oil-less bearings and glass-hard steel gears rule out bindups.

MAXIMUM LIGHT PROJECTION. The mechanism is designed for f/1.5 optical system and 4" diameter lenses and will accommodate the latest high-intensity arc lamps.

WATER-COOLED PROJECTOR APERTURE. Another CENTURY-introduced design, now widely used. CENTURY'S non-condensing, slide-in, water-cooled aperture is a model of simplicity to use but it will pay big dividends in improved projection.

CURVED FILM TRAPS & GATES. CENTURY curved gates are patterned after the well known CENTURY film trap and gate. The new curved film trap features solid fixed shoes. This sturdy precision design, provides positive positioning of the film—therefore positive focus. The aperture plate was designed as an integral part of the film trap which serves to maintain the correct focus.

tical sound tracks through the magnetic system. A scheme such as described may be attractive to many exhibitors because they can dispose of obsolete optical sound equipment, obtain all new amplifier apparatus, and be required to provide maintenance and service for only one new system rather than one old and one new.

It must be made clear that the amplifiers and loud-speakers which are used should all be of the same kind and model. It is impossible to mix loud-speakers or amplifiers of different manufacture or type and obtain satisfactory results.

Loud Speakers

The loud speakers should be placed behind the screen with one at the screen center and the other two one-sixth of the screen width in from each side. The height of the loud-speakers should be such that the high-frequency reproducing unit is about one half to two-thirds of the screen height. All too frequently, the loud-speakers have been placed too far back from the screen, which gives a reproduced sound with some echo and loss of intelligibility.

There is a quality of sound reproduction called "presence" which is difficult to describe but which approximately means that the sound appears to be radiating from the screen surface rather than some place behind; when speakers are placed too far from the screen there is a very distinct and marked decrease in this quality of presence. It is, therefore, important that the loud-speakers be located within six inches of the screen surface, which may require some modifications to the screen frame, but it is far better to do this at the time of the installation.

Even though the electrical output of the amplifier system from test films is alike, the quality is greatly influenced by the adjustment of the loudspeaker, such as shelving, placement, phasing, and distribution in the auditorium. These are all matters which the engineer will handle, and when done correctly, each loud-speaker will sound alike as to volume and quality when reproducing the same sound track. Once the loud-speakers conform to performance standards, the work will not need doing again, except as loud-speaking units may become defective.

Special "Effects" Track

In the early days of the introduction of CinemaScope with stereophonic sound, there was some debate regarding the value and importance of the fourth track for special effects purposes, but this has been largely settled with the experience of those exhibitors who did make the complete installation and, having found that their customers are aware of this feature, always ask that stereophonic release films contain as much material in the surround track as possible. The producer recognizes that the fourth track effects can be overdone, and should only be used when they enhance the presentation or create some special mood or circumstance appropriate to the picture being exhibited.

Surround Loudspeakers

The placement of the surround loud-speakers is difficult to specify since it depends to such a great extent upon the particular theatre, the size of the auditorium, location of the seats, the decoration, etc., but there are some general rules which apply.

If the ceiling is not too high, the surround speakers may be located at the junction of the ceiling and the side walls and rear wall. When placed correctly on the walls they should be 12 to 20 feet above the audience so that the person sitting nearest to the loud-speaker does not hear it at substantially greater loudness than someone further in from the side. There should be enough loud-speakers and the volume of each so adjusted that the sound, when reproduced over the surround speakers, is uniform throughout the auditorium without any one loud-speaker being evident as a single source.

The installing engineer has means for regulating the volume from the various loud-speakers to achieve good distribution of sound. Often, surround speakers must be placed underneath balconies to service the first floor audience seated in that area and, because of this, are usually too close to the audience. In such circumstances, better results can be obtained by using loud-speakers with tilted, or angled baffles or fronts, and install them in such a way that the loud-speaker points towards the underside of the balcony; in this way the audience then hears the sound after it has been reflected from the underside of the balcony and diffused so it no longer sounds as though it were coming from a single source. Usually, it is also necessary to reduce the volume from loud-speakers under balconies.

Another point, often overlooked, is that the surround loud-speakers should have reasonably good reproduction of all the frequencies used in sound, because many of the special effects which are put on the surround track contain low as well as high tones.

The surround loud-speakers may be used as an auxiliary means to reproduce intermission music throughout the auditorium by providing simple switching arrangements. This usage should only be considered if the loud-speakers are of good quality, but the small added cost of better speakers for the surround effects is more easily justified when there is more than one use for the system.

Auxiliary Equipment

The booth should be equipped with a simple demagnetizing tool and a means to test for magnetization, as described in Part IV. Additionally, a splicing block for CinemaScope film should be provided.

Any of the automatic rewinds are suitable for use with magnetic sound tracks.

PART III: UTILIZATION AND OPERATION

To get full utilization and benefit from magnetic stereophonic sound in the theatre there should be a sufficiently wide screen (Part II), correctly located surround speakers, a properly installed system without foreign noises, and intelligent adjustment of the sound loudness in the auditorium. Additionally, the equipment should be maintained in good condition—a subject which will be treated briefly later.

Sound Adjustment

Adjustment of the sound in the auditorium is a very important matter and, although the products from different producers are not very far apart, there are differences. The manager, or projectionist, should check the sound loudness in the auditorium for each new picture which is played, using dialogue as the best test. If the house is a large one, the volume should be adjusted so that the dialogue is just nicely audible and intelligible at the farther seats, otherwise it might be excessively loud at the seats closer to the screen.

Fader Settings

Nearly all theatres require a change in fader settings with the number of people in the theatre; as the theatre fills up, it will generally be found that the fader should be raised one or two steps. The manager should make it part of his job to periodically check the sound loudness and quality throughout the auditorium. The fader setting for the surround loud-speakers should be carefully determined for each picture. The surround signal channel is equipped with a device which makes the surround system active only when there is material to be reproduced. This is done by a special signal applied to the track when the print is made and used only for control purposes. This technical point is mentioned because it is necessary to know where there are sounds recorded on the fourth track before it is possible to make an adjustment for the loudness. Obviously, if the control signal system was defective, no sounds would be heard and no one would know that there was material intended for reproduction on this part of the film, and no way to adjust the loudness. If there is any question about there being signals on the fourth track, the control system can usually be disabled easily and then, by running a few reels, it can be determined whether there are surrounds or special effects signals and adjustment or corrections made as indicated. The service engineer can suggest ways to disable the control circuit. Twentieth Century-Fox includes with each stereophonic sound print, a cue sheet which indicates where there are surround recordings for reproduction. If the indicated signals are not heard it means that the control system is in need of attention. Also, knowing where the sound should be heard, a suitable reel can be chosen for adjustment of the surround loudness for each film.

Sample Procedure

One procedure by which to adjust the surround loudness is as follows: seated in a position two-thirds of the distance from the screen and approximately in the center of the theatre, adjust the volume from the screen horns for correct loudness; then, raise the gain of the surround channel until the signal from the auditorium speakers is just audible. Note the fader setting. Next, further raise the gain of the surround channel until the volume from the surround speakers approximately equals that from the screen and note this fader setting. Set the surround fader control to a position approximately one half between the two settings which were determined.

With the conditions described, the surround speaker loudness will not interfere with the sounds from the screen, but will be just sufficient to make the whole performance seem more realistic and enhance the presentation. If, for any reason, the loudness of the screen horns should be changed, the surround horns should be changed a like amount.

Dirty Film

Dirty film always looks badly on the screen and will cause excessive wear of the magnetic reproducing head. Film cleanliness may seem to be an obvious item, but too frequently it is taken for granted and carelessness in handling becomes the rule rather than the accidental exception. Film should always be handled in a clean place and not allowed to lie or rub on tables or floors. Occasional checks of the projection room by management will usually be beneficial.

Splicing Magnetic Film

There is no problem in the splicing of magnetic sound film. Using a splicing block of all drive-in theatres visited this year (1958) have screen brightness levels under three feet lamberts when showing regular product, and in only five percent were brightness levels over five feet lamberts measured. Brightness levels such as these greatly detract from good presentation.

Increasing the efficiency of drive-in screens is, of course, the most desirable solution to this problem. There are no screen brightness problems where the excellent aluminum drive-in screen developed by the Research Council has been installed. In most cases, the installation of this screen requires comparatively costly modification of the screen tower. The result has been that only some 50 of these screens are in use. Recently, the manufacturer inaugurated a direct sales policy which lowers the cost of the screen 30 percent.

The development of another type of drive-in screen which uses the same optical principles is now being studied by the Research Council engineering staff. The goal of this study is the perfection of a screen that, in the great majority of installations, will not require expensive tower modification. The major goal, of course, is an installed price that will assure wide use of these screens.

General Observations

The Council theatre staff has had an unusual opportunity to meet and to exchange ideas with many people in all activities and all categories of authority in motion picture exhibition.

After visiting some 700 theatres in more than 100 cities, in 12 states, they have become firmly convinced that theatres which are well run are doing better business. Few technical deficiencies are found in such theatres. The presentation is pleasing and smooth. The picture is sharp, the screen brightness is right, the picture is properly masked. Attendants are courteous, there is adequate air turnover, the sound is clear, and the overall condition of the theatres is good; the only complaints heard about product were that there should be more of it. Such theatres were observed to be well attended when showing average good product, and turned people away on weekends when showing pictures which happen to click and get to be more talked about.

It seems logical to hope that improving presentation practices in our theatres will result in a healthier industry. If this is true, the more room for improvement found, the more benefit may derive from stimulation action in the proper direction.

Solutions To Common Problems

From expressed reaction, and from the many letters received by the Research Council from exhibitors in areas visited by the Council theatre field staff, this program has been fruitful in promoting good will within the industry. It has been effective in carrying forward its intended objectives. This has been done, not only directly in the theatres which have been visited, but also on a broader scope in the study of problems common to theatre presentation everywhere.

Solutions to such problems as heat on film, focal drift, excessive print wear, the design of practical, inexpensive gauges for accurate film path alignment, and a long needed new all-purpose projector alignment film have resulted.

modified for CinemaScope, a good splice is made as follows:

- (a) Scrape off the emulsion, as usual, on one side of the splice and scrape off the magnetic sound tracks on the other side of the splice to achieve base to base contact over the whole splice area.
- (b) Apply only a sufficient amount of fresh cement; an excessive amount squeezes out and softens the sound tracks. With the careful application of cement, a good mechanical splice can be made without damage to the magnetic tracks.
- (c) Do not rub or press on the sound track side until 10 to 15 seconds have elapsed to allow the track to dry, particularly if too much cement was used accidentally.

Scraping should be such as to provide as little as possible open space between the ends of the magnetic tracks which are joined. Spaces between tracks are points of no signal and usually make very little noise. However, if the space is unduly large, the splices will be audible.

The splicing block must be demagnetized; otherwise a "pop" in the sound will be heard.

Magnetic sound, of course, has its own peculiar field problems but these are easy to overcome when there is an understanding of the process. In general, it can be said that with reasonable care and in the usual projection booth circumstances, the use of magnetic tracks need cause no alarm. If the handling of magnetic films is confined to the usual rewinds, carrying cases, and projection apparatus, avoiding intimate exposure to transformers, motors, generators, and rectifiers, no more difficulties will be experienced than with the use of photographic sound tracks.

Sometimes theatres splice trailers or other items onto the last reel of the feature. When this is done, the splice must be made at least 28 frames from the last picture frame; otherwise, sound will be cut off, obviously leaving the screen dark for an instant, but this cannot be avoided.

PART IV: MAINTENANCE

Only a few important points will be discussed under this heading, since there have been previous articles published and much of the maintenance in the theatres is done by service organizations under specific contract with the theatre.

The exhibitor should take the advice of the service engineer and not decide upon his maintenance requirements for stereophonic sound equipment on the basis of past experience with photographic sound apparatus, because the latter uses fewer components and has had the benefit of 25 years of development and improvement. To obtain the full value from a stereophonic sound system, the amplification in each one of the principal tracks should be very little different from each other, and quality differences from the three loud speakers during reproduction should be hardly discernable.

Variations from the proper conditions can result from a large variety of causes, principal of which are defective vacuum tubes, variations due to wear of the magnetic pick-up head, and defective loud-speaker units. Very often, these distracting variations occur gradually over a period of time and are not always apparent to the projectionist or the exhibitor until they have reached serious proportions.

SMPTE Test Film

The Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers has available a test film which is very useful as an overall check on stereophonic sound systems. The film runs only three minutes and contains recorded material so arranged that loudness and quality of each one of the channels can be readily compared individually by listening to reproduction in the theatre. The nature of the material is such that differences between channels are easily detected by an untrained ear.

Also included in this test film is some recording on the number four track which will show whether the surround loud-speaker system is working properly. This film is not expensive and, by its use, exhibitors can easily tell when their system is in need of service.

Recording Heads

Magnetic recording heads do wear and, if service is delayed too long, the reproduced quality will be degraded seriously by a readily apparent loss in the high frequencies of speech and music. Life of magnetic sound reproducing heads is determined by many factors, but generally it can be said that two to three thousand hours of theatre operation may be expected, which is five to eight million feet of film per machine.

Damper

Every sound head includes in the mechanism a device known as a "damper," whose operation usually depends upon a special medium thick oil. Unless monthly service is purchased, the projectionist should check this unit regularly to assure that there is sufficient oil for satisfactory operation; lack of oil removes most of the damping action resulting in "wows" in the reproduced sound. Another source of "wow" in the sound reproduction is the upper feed spindle and roll, which require regular attention for good performance. The holdback clutch should be adjusted and maintained for minimum tension and smooth operation, only good reels should be used, and the film path correctly aligned for uniform film pull.

Magnetization Problem

Magnetization of the parts of the projector which contact the magnetic sound tracks will degrade the recordings thereon and may increase the reproduced noise. Once a projector has been thoroughly demagnetized, or degaussed, at the time of the installation, it does not require much attention unless it has been worked upon with magnetized tools or new parts have been installed.

Experience has shown that it is not necessary to demagnetize projectors every day or every other day and sometimes not even as often as once a month, but what is indicated, is that at regular intervals, the projectionist make a simple check of the magnetization of the critical parts of the projector and if these are found to be magnetized corrections should be effected.

The most critical parts in projectors are the gate rails and guides, the pressure shoe, and the intermittent sprocket shoes; less critical parts are the sprockets, rollers, and fire-trap rollers. If the magnetic films must be threaded through the optical sound head,

WALKER HI-GAIN WHITE SCREEN

The newest addition to the Walker line, this screen combines the brightness of a metallic screen with the side angle light distribution of a white screen.*

Reflectivity is controlled by the seamless, wavy, contoured surface which has proved so successful on the High Intensity Screen and the Plastic Molded White Screen.

WALKER HIGH INTENSITY SCREEN

First choice of exhibitors throughout the world since it was introduced in 1950.

This metallic screen, with a seamless, wavy, contoured surface, presents the highest picture brightness possible, consistent with good projection practice.

WALKER PLASTIC MOLDED WHITE SCREEN

Introduced in 1940, this screen represents the highest efficiency that can be built into a white screen. The low ratio of center-to-side reflectivity results in uniform picture brightness from any viewing angle.

Its surface is seamless and contoured to control diffusion of light and increase sharpness of definition.

the sound gate or impedance drum are also of importance. With a new installation of magnetic sound equipment and after the projector has been properly demagnetized, it is suggested that tests for magnetization be made each two weeks for the first six weeks and, if no difficulties arise during this test period, the test procedure can be reduced to one per month for the following three months; if no magnetization problem arises in the first four and one half months it is quite safe to test for magnetization only once every two months thereafter.

If service is purchased on a regular basis calling for attention every other month, or oftener, the service engineer can check for magnetization and apply corrective measures when needed provided, that he is allowed sufficient time.

Magnetization Tests

The Third Revision of the CinemaScope Handbook "Information for the Theatre" contains an excellent and detailed description of satisfactory demagnetizing procedures. It will be sufficient to describe simple tests.

Compass

The most common indicator of magnetic fields is a compass. A small unit, not over three-quarter inch in diameter, of such shape that a brass, plastic or wooden handle may be attached, is most useful. Although not available everywhere, a compass with jeweled bearings is by far the best as it is more sensitive, will not stick and lasts longer. When parts can be readily removed from the machine, lay the compass on a flat surface and move the part around as in Figure A, Page 52. Sprocket wheels should be checked at several places around the circumference and at both sides of the teeth. With other parts, pay special attention to points or sharp corners of the part. Detrimental magnetic fields of a part being tested will swing the compass needle violently when brought near one or the other ends of the needle.

Magnetic fields low enough to be just barely safe will promptly reverse the needle pointing when the part is brought close to the end of polarity which causes the needle to be repelled. If the other end of the compass needle is subjected to the same part the needle will promptly be attracted to it. Safe magnetic fields will move a sensitive compass needle about 30 degrees, or the equivalent of one-third the distance between each of the points of the compass. A less sensitive compass may only move 15 degrees. A thoroughly demagnetized part, within one-quarter inch of the needle, will just barely move it. It is sometimes desirable lightly to tap the surface upon which the compass is resting to avoid sticky bearings.

For testing those parts of the projector not readily removed, the compass must be moved about the machine, close to the parts being inspected, being careful to hold the compass level and to move smoothly, otherwise the needle jiggles so much that the needle indication of magnetic fields might be inconspicuous.

Steel Pins

The second kind of test is best done with the part removed from the machine but it is a test which is more sensitive, is not dependent upon the action of different kinds of compasses and the results are indicative of actual field strength and reproducible. Obtain from the notion section of a department store or from F. W. Woolworth and Company, or any five and 10 cent store the following items.

- (1) A small quantity of common pins three-quarter inch long (these are shorter than the most common variety and are usually found in the dress-making department. These pins must be of steel or iron; if there is a question, test them with any ordinary magnet.
- (2) A spool of silk thread, size A or #50. Alternatively size 60, mercerized, may be used.
- (3) Scotch Tape.

Bend the pin in the middle slightly to form a flat "V" and demagnetize it using a coil type demagnetization tool. The pins may be demagnetized in bulk prior to use. Take a piece of thread 12 to 15 inches long and remove the kinks and bends by pulling through the moistened tips of two fingers until the thread will hang reasonably straight. Tie one end of the thread to the pin at the bendpoint and shift the knot slightly, if necessary, to make the pin hang balanced. Using the Scotch tape as a fastener, suspend the pin by the thread from the projector door or the overhanging edge of a work bench or shelf. Allow about 10 inches of free hanging thread.

After the pin movement has quieted, approach the head end of the pin with the part or surface to be tested, as shown in Figure B, Page 52. Explore many separate points on any surface and all points, ends or edges of the part. The pin will be attracted to the magnetized part and will stick to it as the part is slowly moved away to swing the thread from the vertical position. Finally, when the magnetic attraction is not strong enough to pull the pin, pendulum fashion, any further, the pin will break away and hang vertically again. After each test the pin should be demagnetized or erroneous results will be obtained.

The magnetic strength being measured can be evaluated as follows: fields strong enough to be injurious (10 gauss or more) will attract the free-hanging pin from a distance of three-sixteenth inch to one-quarter inch or more and the pin may be pulled two inches to two and one-half inches from the vertical position, if no downward pull is used, before it breaks away.

Fields just barely safe (about five gauss) will attract the pin from a distance of three thirty-seconds inch to one-eighth inch and the pin may be swung about three-quarter inch from the vertical.

Small safe fields (about two gauss) will attract the pin about three-sixty-four inch to one-sixteenth inch and permit a swing of one-quarter inch from the vertical.

Still smaller values of field strength will just barely show attraction of the pin to the part being tested and the pin can be moved from the vertical position very little. In this instance, there is merely a suggestion that the pin is attracted or can be pulled at all.

Thoroughly demagnetized parts have no attraction to the pin whatsoever unless the pin itself is magnetized.

Using a shorter piece of thread and a demagnetized pin, some parts of the projector may be checked while assembled by moving the pin close to the parts and closely watching the pin action. Any part which attracts the pin and tends to hold it from pulling away—an action that might be described as “sticky”—should be demagnetized.

The procedures described above have been given in considerable detail for reasons of clarity and completeness. With a little experience it will be found that the work is not as laborious as it might seem on first reading. If the indicated practices are followed, no damage will be caused to magnetic tracks by magnetization effects.

The projectionist usually can locate noise due to vacuum tubes by successively turning off the pre-amplifiers or the booster amplifiers, if there are any, to localize the trouble in a general way; then, by progressively changing tubes, the defective ones can be found and eliminated. Most noisy tubes are to be found in the pre-amplifiers.

CONCLUSIONS

No one can deny that the motion picture industry is facing stiff competition. It must, therefore, explore all possible means which will be helpful in maintaining its position in the entertainment field. There are immediately available means by which the commodity can be made more attractive, more pleasant, and more novel, one of which has been described in this article: stereophonic sound. No one suggests that superior presentation or any gimmick can magically transform a poor piece of entertainment into excellent fare, but it is certain that good presentation, different and modern in form goes far in making any production more satisfying and enjoyable. There are many signs that the worst times are past and that a better product is coming, warranting an optimistic attitude towards the future and the taking of the businessman's risk.

Television is going forward technically every day, every week, and every month. Soon it will have a great deal of color available. The motion picture industry similarly must go forward or tolerate a mediocre role in the entertainment field rather than that of a giant. Let's accept the challenge and do something about it.

surfaces with the film and, more especially, with the film emulsion itself—which, of course, mechanically is not feasible.

It is not the purpose of this presentation to go into the controversial subject of how best to operate motion picture film in a projector with minimum film damage, buckle, in and out of focus, etc. Such discussions are best isolated into technical studies of the individual heat effects on the film and methods of reducing them. Sufficient for the purpose of allowing projectionists and theatre owners to evaluate properly this new projection equipment is the substantiated statement that Century believes that for the high light transmission obtained, that the heat causing film damage has been handled in a manner to reduce this damage to a minimum.

The curve of the film trap shoes has been designed to obtain a maximum stabilizing effect for the film during the projection cycle and at the same time to reduce the pull on the film as much as possible thus saving sprocket holes. Film stabilizers are used at the upper loop to reduce film noise and damage.

The Film Gate

The film gate follows the fundamental design of previous Century projector mechanisms. These designs give a freedom of movement to the gate shoes, allowing them to self-align with the film trap shoes and at the same time make a rigid, quiet support in the direction of film travel.

The gate shoes are, of course, curved to fit the film trap shoes. These shoes, like the film trap shoes, are heavy and solid, and have a hard polished chromium plate. Thus the film is supported in a proven design which holds it firmly but gently in position for accurate, stabilized, steady pictures.

The Lens Mount

A new lens mount has been incorporated in this 70/35mm mechanism which is patterned after the Model H mechanism. The lens mount and gate support have been separated so that not only does the gate opening knob open and close the gate smoothly and easily, but also the lens mount itself provides for shifting the center line of the lens to the center line of the film under the control of a calibrated, designated adjustment knob. This knob could, under certain circumstances, be used accurately to position the picture on the screen for certain conditions. This optical center line adjustment is necessary because of the difference in the picture center between standard 35mm film and 70mm film.

The calibrated knob adjustment incorporated into the new lens mount eliminates the need of eccentric adapter bushings which must always be rotated into proper position to compensate for the center line shift. It also places the lens into proper position without introducing "errors" in positioning the picture on the screen from lens "errors" introduced when lenses are turned in their mounts. In other words, with the Century lens mount, the lens is always in the proper position for optimum screen results.

The lens clamp makes contact with the lens barrel over a considerable portion of its length. No longer is the lens clamp merely a strap. The whole mount becomes a complete clamp insuring accurate focusing and exact picture positioning on the screen.

Shutters

The Model J Projector has double rear shutters of the disc design. Comparative measurements disclose that double rear shutters provide the highest possible light efficiency consistent with good mechanical and light practice. The shutters run at a safe, conservative speed absolutely synchronized with the intermittent movement.

Every revolution of the two shutters represents the projection of one frame of the motion picture film. There being two light openings per revolution of the shutters, the frequency of light pulse is 48 per second.

The design of the Century system of intermittent movement and shutter anticipates that development work now in progress may result in even higher efficiency operation, with an increase in the frequency of light pulses reaching the screen. In anticipation of this becoming a reality this new projector has already made provision to accept these new developments as soon as they become commercially available.

All heat shields, shutter guards, etc., are capable of being used with light paths having a speed of F 1.5 to F 1.6. It is believed by the best authorities in the optical companies that such high speed operation of arc lamps and lenses is difficult to attain while maintaining the optimum in light efficiency, resolving power, minimum aberration, and definition. This is especially true when projecting 70mm film. Without reservation, Century claims that the Model J mechanism has provided for the highest transmission of light (screen brightness) with the minimum amount of flicker possible within the known factors of motion picture engineering at this time.

A unique design of the shutter guard employs the air circulating power of the shutter blades (otherwise thrown away) to circulate a large volume of air around the non water cooled shields and heat absorbing filters to carry away any excess of heat developed by the arc lamp in these units.

The heat shields used in all Century projectors are designed scientifically to allow the full passage of unobstructed light and to prevent unwanted radiant heat being trapped before it reaches the aperture or film.

In considering any problem relating to heat and projector operation it is necessary to recognize the definite difference between the terms heat and temperature. When we say something is hot, we actually mean the temperature is high. Heat on the other hand is a measure of the quantity of that which can make something hot if it is not removed. In analyzing a Century projector, recognition of the devices used to remove the heat will explain why the Model J mechanism, without auxiliary air blowers, remains cool and operates with lower film temperatures. If there is any doubt, a simple test by feeling the take up reel of film after a run is most convincing because its temperature is lower and therefore it feels cooler.

The Optical Reproducer

The optical reproducer is essentially a standard, proven, Century design modified to bypass the 70mm film. The film stabilization used in this reproducer won an Academy of Arts and Sciences Award for "Improved Reproduction for Motion Picture Theatres and Studios." It is the basis of practically every good recording or rerecording system in use in the major studios of Hollywood. Since this Award was made, there has been no sound reproducer designed or built with an improved operating result as to warrant further recognition by any qualified engineering organization such, for example, as the Academy, or the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers.

Attention should be called to the universal adaption of the Model J Projector for mounting to existing standard pedestals. When supplied as a complete projector, Century recommends the Model C pedestal or the heavier special Delux pedestal, which is designed for the new special arc lamps now being used in critical locations.

The Magnetic Reproducer

The magnetic reproducer follows the same design methods as the optical reproducer. The film paths are simple and direct and leave plenty of room for handling the wider 70mm film.

There are two magnetic clusters (heads) incorporated in the reproducer. One provides reproduction for 35mm magnetic CinemaScope sound tracks (four channel or single channel), and a second provides for the reproduction from the six channel 70mm film. Century believes that the added cost of providing two pick up heads (one for 35mm and one for 70mm) is justified in the long run because of the probable unequal projection time of 35mm and 70mm films. Thus, when worn heads need to be replaced, only that head which has worn will require replacement.

In addition, there are two separate film paths (one for 35mm and one for 70mm). Thus, the projectionist can easily recognize, by looking at the film, whether it has been threaded correctly past the right pick up head. The film stabilization being of the tight loop design, controlled by accurately designed spring tensions, the optimum film pressure against the pick up heads is assured by checking the loop size gauge, which is large and prominently marked with a red line which cannot be missed even in the reduced illumination of the average theatre booth.

This magnetic reproducer is driven from a direct extension of a vertical shaft from the projector mechanism. The film is under no greater tension or pull than in any standard projector and it is under even less than in many 35mm projectors. The driven sprocket in this reproducer insures also that the film is pulled from the feed magazine in a smooth, even manner minimizing variations in film motion which might cause flutter or wows. Two separate solder terminal strips are provided with substantial lugs for the serviceman to connect cables to the 35mm four track and the 70mm six track heads.

Each pick up head has its own plug arrangement so that a head may be easily changed. Each head is pre-aligned and pre-set, so that no additional alignment adjustments need be made if by chance a head is replaced. All of these refinements are necessarily costly, but have been included because they contribute to ease of installation and service.

Magazines

The film magazines are 24 inches in diameter to take 22 or 23 inch reels. The spindles are one-half inch in diameter and drive the reels through pins. Both 35mm and 70mm reels may be used in the magazines. If one-half inch spindles are used for the 70mm reels, then special 35mm reels are required, providing fast changes (30 seconds) are to be made from one film dimension to the other.

If a decision is made to operate for a period of time running only 35mm film, a simple change of the operating side spindle can be made. Thereafter, standard 35mm film reels can be used until the next 70mm show is scheduled. The spindle can then be changed to one-half inch. It is recommended that whenever 70mm film is projected that the one-half inch spindles are used.

The new and larger magazines contain ball bearings throughout and a new proven system of tension devices. The take-up has been designed to handle the increased size and weight of the 70mm reels, at the same time being entirely satisfactory for the 35mm film. At no time while the film is in motion is the entire pulling tension of the upper magazine plus the reproducer or the hold back tension of the lower magazine plus its reproducer assumed by the sprocket holes of the film. Part of this load is compensated for by the tight loop tension of the film stabilizer. Because of this feature, film breakage is practically eliminated and longer film life assured.

The Gear Drive

The gear drive, except for the extension of the vertical shaft to the magnetic reproducer, is the same heavy construction which has been used for years in the standard 35mm equipment, modified where necessary for the running of 70mm film. By using these designs, replacement parts are assured at every servicing depot handling Century equipment. Naturally, the availability of such items applies to the gear train and drive shafts only, and not to the expanded sprockets, etc., pertaining to direct contact with the 70mm film.

Film Traps and Rollers

The 35mm fire traps are removable when running 70mm film. Both the upper fire trap and lower fire trap are interchangeable so that there is no chance of a mixup when making a fast change to 35mm operation.

Film Speeds

At one time it was thought desirable to run film at 30 frames per second. Since then, however, the industry has accepted a standard 24 frames per second as the most economical and feasible. The standard Century 70mm/35mm projector will run at 24 frames per second. If, by chance, a picture having 30 frames per second speed is programmed, the projector easily can be changed to the now obsolete speed.

Changeover Operation

Turn over three pad rollers from 70 to 35mm designation, slide out the film trap and gate; slide in the 35mm film trap and gate, and the projectionist is ready to thread 35mm film. To change from 35mm back to 70mm, the same operation is followed, sliding in 35mm film traps and gates. The whole operation should not take longer than 30 seconds.

Installation

The installation of the Model J projector is not unlike that of a standard 35mm projector. Each unit may be shipped and installed separately. Each unit is replaceable for servicing and/or repair. As a matter of fact, the projector mechanism itself can be installed and operated on a standard 35mm optical reproducer and with a standard 35mm penthouse reproducer with standard 35mm magazines, pending full modernization to 70mm operation. Thus, only a fraction of an original investment need be made until such time as a 70mm program is actually scheduled; then further investment can be made to prepare fully for running large film widths.

Food and Refreshment Merchandising

In Self Operation or Concession, the Theatre's Welfare Is the Paramount Consideration; Here are Two Viewpoints

INDEPENDENT OPERATION

Basic Truths

■ WHETHER THE THEATRE FOOD and refreshment operation is conducted in a conventional house or at a drive-in, certain basic truths must be understood before a merchandising analysis has any meaning. These truths are as indispensable to the concession operation, which we will examine later, as they are to the independent operation.

To begin with, it is essential that the theatre itself do good business if the refreshment stand is to profit. The theatre's gross is the basic thing with which the exhibitor-stand operator (and the concessionaire, when there is one) must be concerned.

At the same time, the exhibitor must ask himself whether the refreshment stand actively contributes to the profitable operation of the theatre or whether it is a detriment.

Second, the theatreman must know that the refreshment facility is the best he can economically afford. It is necessary to realize here that it would not be sound business practice to equip a large stand in a small theatre. But the stand that belongs in the small theatre should be well equipped, well designed, appealing, and kept up-to-date. Although you cannot afford first run film costs in a small neighborhood house, you should at least operate the theatre, regardless of run, with an intelligent policy of booking and exploitation. The refreshment business is no different.

Third, whether large or small, drive-in or roofed, you need make no compromise with quality in the theatre food and refreshment operation. All your items can be "National Release Date," all socheroo, all can have "star" appeal. You don't have to take a back seat to anyone here. So take advantage of it!

Food and Entertainment

In subscribing to the theory that food and entertainment cannot be divorced—which the vast majority of theatremen now do—it must be recognized that over 23 percent of all personal income in this country is spent on food, while only five percent is earmarked for entertainment. Therefore, it is obvious that the food market is almost five times as large.

• Mr. Lowe, recently elected president of the National Association of Concessionaires, has long been active in exhibition and in the theatre food and refreshment field. He is in a position to look at theatre food and refreshment merchandising with a unique, dual point of view because he is currently both a concessionaire (Lowe Merchandising Service, Inc.) and an exhibitor, associated in the operation and ownership of a number of New England drive-ins.

Theatres, we believe who provide edibles in them, are a perfect setting for food and drink, which should not and cannot be divorced from entertainment.

In the case of two theatres playing the same picture, at the same price, and in the same neighborhood, we are convinced that the one with the best refreshments is going to get the patronage. While food is not the selling factor when the film is no good, it very certainly is the plus factor when the picture is superior and all other things are equal, with respect to the physical theatre.

Food and Management

Top management and the location management of the theatre cannot be aloof from the food operation, whether independent or concession. It is extremely important, no matter what the circumstances of the operation, that the exhibitor on every level retain some supervision of, and active interest in, the refreshment stand.

Basic Merchandising Rules

There are a number of things the exhibitor can and must do to insure that his self-operated adjunct to the theatre really means something toward its welfare. This means, again, top and local management sharing in operational policies of the facilities. One of the most important considerations is to make sure that the basic rules of good merchandising are followed.

Some of these rules are:

- 1) Absolute cleanliness of the physical plant and the personnel. In our own situations, we endeavor to have all attendants in uniform.
- 2) Patrons of the theatre must be sold what they want at a fair price. For instance, it should go without saying that we would not undertake selling tamales in New England, any more than we would try to move chowder or pancakes in Texas.
- 3) What is sold must be of good quality, properly prepared, and properly served.
- 4) Standard and proven merchandising procedures should be followed.

These are two proven methods:

- a. Offer drinks in more than one size.
 - b. Use color schemes which have been found conducive to buying food and drink. Red and green, for example, have been found unfavorable for food merchandising. Light pastels of yellow, blue, coral and other shades are better when color must be used.
- 5) The operation should be slanted to all elements of the theatre's patronage. It is just as important to offer a 10 cent ice cream package for children as it is to offer one at 25 cents for adults. Also, it is important to offer low profit items, like milk, for which there is a demand.

SIGN OF GOOD TASTE

6) Maintain an open mind toward unproven merchandising methods and toward new items which can offer increased profits when handled properly. With respect to this last point, the exhibitor operating his own facility should do certain very definite things to keep abreast of the field:

- a. He should read as many dependable and informative trade papers as possible, analyzing what they have to say in the light of what he is trying to do.
- b. He should attend every convention accessible to him, whether or not he is affiliated with the group which is meeting.

THE CAFERAMA INTERIOR is laid out in the cafeteria style, the author's preferred system.

- c. He should devote as much time as possible to trade shows, giving the show exhibitors an opportunity to sell him new ideas. When he knows food equipment and products, he is on his way to a profitable operation.

Merchandising Gimmicks

A gimmick which has proven itself a definite contribution to the theatre operation is one concerning the merchandising of milk. Low on profit, milk can serve you in other ways. We have tried successfully to move it at 15 cents with the pitch that we will fill a baby's bottle for nothing. "If you must buy milk, we give it to you; if you want it, you pay." This is the kind of approach to the theatre's general well being that all refreshment stands must aim for.

Another example of this is based on our conviction that customers want to be entertained from the time they enter the theatre until the time that they leave. At drive-ins, especially, running taped music and refreshment stand plugs over the sound system entertains patrons and reminds them at the same time of merchandise which can please them. An hour before the show, a disc jockey takes over—in theatres where interest can be maintained in this way—who plays more music, cracks jokes, and, most important, for certain pre-announced activities, awards prizes. These prizes are almost always food items which have been promoted from suppliers: a six-pack of a soft drink, or a one pound package of hot dogs, or some other item currently being promoted. Or, free slips can be distributed for a specific item which we are introducing, another proven method of bringing the theatre patron to the refreshment stand and, at the same time, establishing an addition to our menu. Any time people receive more than they bargained for, you get what you want: they build attendance.

Another proven gimmick is the occasional or regular instruction to patrons arriving at the theatre to keep their ticket stubs. Later, five numbers are posted at the refreshment stand for a certain amount ($1.00 or less) of refreshment items. This is certain to get people out of their cars or their seats at intermission which, whether they know it or not, contributes to their overall enjoyment of the entertainment. They are getting more than they bargained for because we are bringing them to the scene of activity. This is particularly important at the lobby-less drive-in. Americans are a gregarious people, fundamentally: they like crowds, they like to go to ABSOLUTE CLEANLINESS of the physical plant and personnel for the preparation of food are two principal merchandising rules. Shown here are the kitchen facilities of the Shipyard Drive-In Cafeteria.

Preferred and Profitable... Pepsi-Cola's 292% gain in syrup sales since 1950 shows that your customers recognize Pepsi quality and prefer this refreshment. Why not select the brand that has more to offer in both prestige and profits? Among those profiting by the big preference for Pepsi are: Interstate Circuit, Inc., Malco Theatres, Inc., Walter Reade Theatres, Inc., Skouras Theatres, Inc., Stanley Warner Management Corp., Crescent Amusement Co., and many other theatre owners. *Get details from your local Pepsi-Cola bottler or write to: National Accounts Dept., Pepsi-Cola Co., 3 West 57th St., New York 19, N. popular places, they like to see neighbors, friends, and strangers. At the drive-in, there is little or no contact between customers unless you can get them to the stand.

CONCESSION OPERATION

Relationship With Exhibitor

When a concessionaire comes in to operate the theatre food and refreshment stand, he is taking the responsibility to exercise authority properly. On the other hand, he must have from the owner and/or manager intelligent cooperation, which should take the form of reasonable selling time during an intermission; however, he should not insist on unreasonable selling time. He must remember at all times that he is operating for the exhibitor's good as well as his own, and that prolonged intermissions cannot have a good effect on the welfare of the theatre.

The concessionaire, in general, should feel that he is getting the same kind of cooperation from the theatremen as he would from a partner although, of course, that contractual obligation is not present. Further, he should expect suggestions from the theatre's management and give them every possible consideration in the light of his more experienced position in the food field. The theatremen should feel obligated to make suggestions, but not to insist that they be carried out. The relationship should be a two way street in which, should increased facilities or the like be mandatory, the theatremen is open minded; the concessionaire must be prepared to meet this cooperation with effort and results which justify it.

With respect to the agreement between concessionaire and theatre owner, the concession business is moving too fast to permit short term contracts, which easily can result in a stagnant situation of no benefit to theatre or concessionaire. The entire concept of a reasonable, working arrangement between the two is basic to success of both.

As the king pin of this part of the theatre operation, the concessionaire's primary purpose is to sell food and to make money for everyone concerned. The concessionaire operating properly does not "gouge" anyone; least of all the public. He uses good quality food and follows other merchandising practices stated heretofore.

Give And Take

But, owing to the competitive nature of acquiring the concession contract, the owner can often push the concessionaire into an agreement which makes it difficult for the latter to do all he might want. The theatremen is obliged, in his own interest actually, to be careful in this respect.

For instance, a concessionaire would lose money, normally, on every five cent candy bar at a drive-in operation. Therefore, if he doesn't want to sell a five cent bar, he is entitled to sell one for 10 cents. Again, there might be a food item an independent operator in different circumstances might sell without profit (and without too much damage to his profit structure), but that the theatre concessionaire could not sell without incurring a serious economic risk.

Hot Food For Hungry Patrons

Soup and Other Canned Hot Foods Are Big Profitmakers, Dispensed Quickly By Attendants or Automatic Vendors

■ THEATRE OPERATORS may very well want to consider the installation of automatic hot food facilities as a way of adding extra profits. At the outset, it is admitted that the theatre owner is not a restaurant operator. He's in the business to show moving pictures; to get the biggest box-office attractions he can and to exhibit them with the greatest showmanship at his command. However, automatic hot food facilities may provide the profit edge he's been looking for, may help to make his theatre unique in its area and stir up some free word-of-mouth advertising among his patrons. Certainly, recent developments both in automatic dispensers and in methods of packaging make it an area worth investigating.

Automatic hot food merchandising is a field that has been growing by leaps and bounds. Vending machines—that is, the coin-operated machines—dispensed over $2 billion worth of products in 1958. According to S. W. Cobourn, Manager, Institutional Sales, Campbell Soup Company, 1959 should be the best year yet, with the greatest proportional gains coming in the hot food vending field.

Quick Attendant Service

Automatic hot soup ovens—those that are operated by an attendant who pushes a button and serves the soup—are finding increased use in counter service and at snack bars. The newest addition to this field is that made by Le Bron of Omaha, Nebraska. The model shown here handles 54 cans of eight-ounce soups and comes with a flashing sign that serves as a constant reminder to the theatre patron that hot soup and food is available. The Le Bron automatic oven occupies only one-and-one-half feet of valuable back bar space, and can be easily handled by theatre refreshments stands selling soft drinks, pop corn, candy, and cigarettes.

Loading, care, and maintenance are extremely simple. The eight-ounce cans are dropped into the top of each rack, and then roll into the vending position. A thermostatic control produces cans heated at 150 degrees. The oven needs little lubrication and is easy to clean. The person behind the counter can serve up a can of soup in less than 20 seconds and it eliminates the need of a hot cup dispenser. Such an oven costs in the neighborhood of $80. Full information is available through local Campbell Soup Company sales representatives.

As in any automatic process, speed is the essential thing. The customer points to the soup he wants and the operator presses the button. The soup can be eaten out of the can or served in any container the operator or concessionaire cares to provide. The usual price is 25 cents for a can of soup, and this includes the use of containers and plastic spoons. Certainly a case for such an installation is that the sale of hot soup or food available greatly rounds off a theatre concession for the patron who wants more than coffee popcorn and candy, and doesn't want to leave the theatre to get it.

Vending Machine Service

Another area the theatre owner may want to investigate is the coin-operated vending machine. Hot food vending is actually an infant industry. The first machines went into operation early in 1956 and, according to one authority, their use more than doubled in 1957. An idea of their wide application may be obtained from this statement by Mr. Cobourn: "Hot food vending may be the infant of this $2 billion industry, but it's about as robust and fast a growing an infant as any business man can hope to see. Machines which vend hot soups and other canned foods are today in use in such varied locations as bus terminals, airports, offices, ships, country clubs, ski resorts, and mobile lunch canteens." Besides soups, hot food machines now vend Chili con Carne, Pork and beans; Chinese and Italian foods such as spaghetti and meat balls; and a variety of stews. Vending operators set the prices. Soups usually sell for 15 or 20 cents, other hot foods slightly more.

Merchandising Research

In connection with this last, another point that should be covered for the theatre operator contemplating hot food automatic merchandising is the successful research done by the Campbell Soup Company to lessen the amount of heat felt by a person when he touches a hot can of soup that has just popped out of the oven or vending machine. Campbell has developed an inner liner positioned between the can face and the outside regular label. This liner has insulating properties which reduce the conductivity of the heat from the heated can through to the "touch" of the holder's hand. The new insulating liner is being applied to Campbell's eight-ounce soups and other products—Pork and Beans, Chili con Carne, Beans 'n Franks, and the new Franco American Spaghetti with ground beef.

It is hoped that this survey of the recent developments and innovations will spark the imagination of theatre operators about the possibilities that exist in automatic hot food merchandising. Imagination is certainly the key word here, for a lot will depend on where the machine is located and how intensely the hot food facilities are promoted with moviegoers. In any case, automatic merchandising is here to stay and it's moving in one direction—up. It is the individual theatre operator who must evaluate just how this "infant" may help his profit picture become a brighter one.

Popcorn Merchandising Program

A New Approach To Selling Popcorn In Theatres Is Paying Off With Increased Sales, Better Profits

■ POPCORN SALES IN THEATRES have been declining faster than ticket sales ever since 1949. In that period, the sale of popcorn represented 70 per cent of concession stand intake. Now, a recent check shows that popcorn in a majority of theatres grosses a low 40 per cent of stand business. A nine-cent per person average on all stand items in the 1949 period has today in some cases increased as high as 25 cents per person in indoor theatres and one dollar per person at drive-ins.

The popcorn industry has been unable to stop this transfer of sales in the theatre field because there has been no coordinated merchandising program such as that used by candy, soft drink, and other manufacturers.

To help change this decline in popcorn sales, Manley, Inc., has developed a merchandising program in order to furnish the theatre industry with new basic tools needed to sell more popcorn to more people. This is accomplished through the use of new equipment and a co-ordinated merchandising and quality control program.

Eight years of tests in theatres scattered across the country show increases of as much as 60 per cent in popcorn sales. The test locations use Manley popcorn machines, supplies, and point-of-sale promotional material. The Manley formula has increased per ticket sales of popcorn in every theatre in which Manley's Theatre Merchandising Program is in effect. The success of this Program is based on suggestive selling. A nation-wide sales force of Manley promotion supervisors continually trains and stimulates theatre personnel to obtain maximum sales and profits for theatres.

This suggestive selling calls for actual work at the stands by the Manley supervisors, frequent concession personnel training, and the use of pre-tested promotional display material. The result is greater enthusiasm at the stands, higher total concession sales, more efficient use of equipment, less waste, and higher per ticket sales.

Such a profit picture is achieved with new equipment, without investment by the theatre. Manley, Inc., as part of its Popcorn Merchandising Program for theatres, furnishes the following:

1. New popcorn machines and concession equipment at no charge.
2. Provides operating supplies, popcorn, seasoning, salt, and containers to the theatre's specification.
3. The promotional sales force of Manley calls on each theatre regularly, trains concession personnel in preventive maintenance and cleanliness. Concession stand personnel is instructed in popping and sales techniques, merchandising, use of display advertising, related item selling in customer relations, all within the limitations of house policy. They apply their knowledge of theatre concession business to an over-all merchandising effort with emphasis on popcorn rather than on popcorn alone. Tie-in sales are encouraged. Physical inventories are taken and stock properly rotated.
4. Film trailer advertising on both popcorn and general concession merchandise is furnished as needed, as well as seasonal point-of-sale advertising. For drive-in concessions, tape recordings are furnished for use at the manager's discretion.

BY PATRICIA M. IPPOLITO
Manley, Inc.

New equipment and trained concession personnel, stimulated by Manley's merchandising sales force and planned monthly pre-tested promotional campaigns, result in a greatly improved profit to the theatre.

THE MANLEY CONCESSION MERCHANDISING PROGRAM is seen in action at these theatre stands. Monthly, pre-tested point of sale material is designed to increase popcorn and general stand sales.

Promoting Good Coffee

The Coffee Brewing Institute is Conducting a Contest Which Offers Excellent Publicity for Theatre Stands

■ AS THE LARGEST SELLING item in the public feeding industry, coffee occupies a unique position. Properly handled, it can be used to draw customers to ensure their continued patronage. Improperly handled, a poor cup of coffee can spoil the finest meal.

Purpose

Bearing this fact in mind, and knowing also that coffee prices are at their lowest level in eight years, many food operators are endeavoring to improve the quality of the coffee that they serve. One of the difficulties in achieving this aim has been to determine what constitutes a good cup of coffee and to develop a method of objective measurement.

By using a technique developed by The Coffee Brewing Institute, it is now possible to measure coffee served to a customer and know whether the brewing procedure used has produced the most desirable cup of coffee attainable with the blend used. Using this system, a contest has been developed which is designed to provide competition among managers for the distinction of serving the best possible cup of coffee.

Benefits

1. Properly run contests improve employee morale and quality standards.
2. Management will be provided with objective appraisal of the quality and consistency of coffee being served, as well as information for correction and improvement, if that should be necessary.
3. Winning situations receive a "golden cup" symbolic of coffee beverage excellence for display purposes and on-the-spot publicity.
4. Suggestions for advertising, publicity, and promotional tie-ins will be provided.

Golden Cup Contest

The "Golden Cup Contest" is designed to encourage the production and service of the finest coffee beverage possible in feeding establishments throughout the country. This is not a contest in the usual sense of the word, where there is one winner and a number of runners-up.

There is no competition between entrants. Instead, each contestant strives to meet a standard of coffee brewing excellence set up by The Coffee Brewing Institute. All those who do, become winners and are awarded a handsome "Golden Cup" wall trophy. The contest can be entered at any time, or as often as desired.

Contestants will submit samples of the beverage to be judged. Each will be subject to a soluble solids analysis test. To win, the samples submitted must fall within the ideal area established on the Institute Brewing Control Chart. Cleanliness will also be a factor in choosing those eligible for the award.

The Institute will supply contestants with brew sample kits for $6.00 each. This fee covers the processing of samples, the plotting of results on a graph, and recommendations for improving brewing procedures, if necessary. Check lists will be provided free of charge.

Supervisors of establishments competing will collect samples and check procedures at unannounced times. Samples must be taken from each set of equipment during each shift. Sampling is accomplished by drawing off two ounces of thoroughly mixed, brewed coffee into a bottle, which is forwarded to the Coffee Brewing Institute for processing.

Supplementary materials which have been prepared by the Institute and offered at cost to contestants include an announcement flyer to personnel which can be posted on bulletin boards, table tents for distribution at competing establishment, wallet card certificates for presentation to individual members of brewing staff winning, and "Golden Cup" cigarette lighters, which may also be distributed to individual staff members. Results can be made public or be restricted to those competing, at the contestants discretion.

General Rules

1. In chain operations, the contest should be limited to branches under the supervision of one division manager.
2. Supervisory personnel must be strictly impartial.
3. Before the contest begins, each competing manager should have the opportunity to learn the principles of proper coffee brewing.

THIS is The Coffee Brewing Institute's quality control chart. Golden Cup Award contestants must submit samples in the ideal range of the chart to be eligible to win.

- Contest rules should be prominently displayed.
- If the name of The Coffee Brewing Institute is used, or reference is made to the contest in advertising, publicity or promotional material, copy must be approved by The C.B.I.
- Brew sample kits will consist of a mailing tube, two (2) 2 ounce sample bottles, two (2) information sheets to be filled out when samples are taken, and a C.B.I. addressed sticker for mailing purposes. Kits will be supplied by C.B.I. at $6 each. This fee covers processing of samples, plotting of results on a graph, and recommendations for methods of improving procedure.

- Golden Cup publicity materials may be used by all contestants for the duration of the contest. These can be purchased from C.B.I. at cost. Winners may use them for an additional 60 days.

Testing Rules

These rules should be displayed for personnel:

- Contest will run two (2) weeks, (date) to (date).
- Samples will be collected and checking conducted by supervisors at unannounced times.
- Checking will consist of a brief examination of brewing and serving equipment for cleanliness. Results will be reported on a check list. Failure to achieve the proper results will disqualify the contestant.
- Sampling will be done by drawing off two (2) ounces of thoroughly mixed, brewed coffee into a bottle and forwarding it to C.B.I., where it will be processed. To win, all brew samples must register in the "ideal" area of the brewing control chart.
- Samples must be taken from each set of equipment during each shift.
- Samples should not be taken until after at least four (4) cups of coffee have been served from the equipment.
- There can be multiple winners. In case of ties, each winner will receive a trophy.
- Brew sample kits and check lists will be provided by C.B.I.
- When possible, a representative of the C.B.I. will visit the contestant, unannounced, during the contest and take an additional sample or samples for test purposes.

Awards

- Winners will receive "golden cup" trophy from C.B.I. for display.
- Employees who actually brew coffee, will receive wallet cards from C.B.I. attesting to their skill in coffee making.

Promotion Suggestions

- Announcement letter should be sent to each manager explaining the purpose of the contest, the rules, and the benefits to be derived from it.
- A flyer has been prepared, suitable for bulletin board posting, giving the rules and prizes.
- Each manager should call a meeting of employees to discuss the contest thoroughly, enthuse the employees, and answer any questions they may have.
- Representatives of coffee supplier and equipment manufacturer should be contacted for assistance before and during contest.

Awarding Prizes

- Prizes will be presented to winner by the C.B.I. This can be done at a general meeting or directly at the winning establishment.
- Local newspapers should be notified of presentation.
- Pictures and stories should be sent to trade newspapers and magazines.
- If there is an advertising program, reference should be made to the contest and the winner.
- Top management should recognize the winning manager and supervisor, by means of an appropriate award. This can be in the form of a congratulatory letter from a top official or whatever is deemed most satisfactory.
- Consideration should be given to having the winner appear on radio and television locally or nationally (if practical).

Follow Up

- Trophy should be prominently displayed where customers may see it.
- Losers should follow the recommendations of C.B.I. and then re-test their coffee to see if proper standards are being met.
- Winners should be encouraged to refer to the "Golden Cup of Coffee" when asking patrons for beverage selection, or offering a second cup.
- Advertising tie-ins may be developed with coffee supplier and equipment manufacturer.
- Distribute questionnaires to customers of winning establishment and those in similar (but losing) one, to see if they are aware of the difference.
- The contest can be repeated in three or six months to determine the amount of improvement in the various branches.

Tips To Contestants

In particular, pay careful attention to the following points:

- Be sure equipment is clean.
- Start with boiling water.
- Spread coffee evenly in filter device.
- Never brew less than 2/3 capacity of the equipment.
- Use between 2 and 2½ gallons of water to each pound (16 oz.) of coffee, or the equivalent in larger or smaller batches.
- Never repour brewed coffee through used coffee grounds.
- Remove grounds as soon as brewing is completed.
- Be sure brew is thoroughly mixed.

Cleanliness Is the First Principle

Profitable Refreshment Selling Calls For Well Groomed Attendants, Spotless Stands

■ ALTHOUGH IT IS ALMOST universally recognized in the industry that cleanliness at the theatre refreshment stand is essential to profitable operation, the cleanliness and the appearance of the attendants too frequently is neglected, especially in that it pertains to everyone connected with the preparation and serving of food and drink.

Turning to the psychology of the customer for a moment, a stand presided over by an attendant attractively groomed, alert, and smiling is often the most effective sales argument that can be presented. To achieve this, the attendant need do nothing more than pay careful attention to generally accepted standards of personal cleanliness.

Personal Cleanliness

Fully realizing the value of this, management should develop a routine which will make attendants' observation of cleanliness automatic. Before going on duty, an attendant should be certain he or she has not overlooked any of the four "musts":

1. Well Washed Hands—Thorough soaping and plenty of hot water should be used. The finger nails should be clean and as well manicured as possible. Female attendants should not use nail polish except that of the clear variety.

2. Neat Hair—While it is important that attendant, male or female, present an attractive appearance, long hair should be discouraged and ill groomed hair not tolerated. Stray hair in food means lost customers. Loose hairs lose sales.

3. Spotless Uniform—Although the uniformed attendant is not regarded as essential, it is recognized more and more often today that the uniform is a highly desirable adjunct to the operation. It imparts a more professional air to your refreshment operation, among many other advantages. However, the uniform is a wasteful expense to you unless it is clean at all times. Dirty, it is nothing better than offensive. Non-uniformed attendants must take even more care of their apparel.

4. Clean Face—Regardless of a female attendants' ideas about cosmetics, you must insist on moderation in their use. A well scrubbed, wholesome face on male or female attendant is likely to perk up customers' appetites.

Carelessness or disregard for these simple, elementary, and by no means comprehensive rules usually results in lost profits and prestige. The slovenly appearance of an attendant is a blatant advertisement of mediocre or even poor quality preparation and service, no matter how good your merchandise.

Extra Profits can best be described as "extra efforts." No theatreman has a right to expect his refreshment operation to return its healthy potential without giving careful consideration to every detail. While he must, of necessity, expend much effort in other directions, he cannot afford to neglect the very first principle of his operation: absolute cleanliness, not only of personnel, but of all equipment and the facility itself.

With respect to cleanliness of equipment, all personnel should be instructed carefully in preferred maintenance procedures, either those provided by the manufacturers, or those developed independently by the operator as the best suited to his particular needs.

The fact that a certain unit for the preparation of food is not on display to the public is all the more reason for its careful maintenance. Needless to say, those units in the limelight must never be allowed to show anything but absolute cleanliness, in use or not.

In conclusion, cleanliness of the refreshment stand is synonymous with profitable and successful operation, without exception.

An example of the foregoing can be found at the Shipyard Drive-In, Providence, R. I. Here, we offer chicken-in-the-basket at 75 cents, a price at which no concessionaire could make money. However, operating this stand as exhibitors, we wish to make this offer to induce patrons to come early for dinner. In this case, the price of the product is feasible for the exhibitor.

Advantages of Concessionaire

Certain advantages in the concession operation are obvious. The concessionaire has comparative figures on a wide range of operations which the exhibitor can never have. Also, the concessionaire has operating formulae derived from experience specifically in the theatre phase of the concession business. With these, he is likely to be more progressive in the sense that he is quicker to institute advance methods. Generally speaking, the concessionaire has to have better control of the operation than an exhibitor, in order to minimize losses.

Of course, a concessionaire's formulae, if available to the independently operating exhibitor, would be helpful; however, it would be next to impossible to base these formulae, if made available, on the current record. Instead, they would be the result of past performance not necessarily applicable at the present time.

An example is buttered popcorn. It was first merchandised in theatres by the big concession concerns, which proved it a potential success in a few situations. All this while the independent sat back and waited for the outcome.

The concessionaire today has to "spend money to make money." He is quicker to put into operation proven new equipment, ideas, and items. He has to, or he becomes guilty of stagnation. The right concessionaire is never complacent, he never says he is satisfied with either gross or net.

PHILIP L. LOWE

Responsibility

A concessionaire's job is to sell food; the exhibitor's to sell entertainment. The concessionaire's position for the sale of entertainment, it must be recognized, is not one of responsibility, but of cooperation. The direction of the concessionaire's activities in the field of entertainment should come from the theatreman. The concessionaire is obliged to do a good, honest job, but the exhibitor must lead him, not expect him to sell films.

The concessionaire has responsibility also to develop new equipment and new items. He researches the field in a way that the independent, with his other responsibilities, normally does not. It is this phase of the concessionaire's activity which has made his field the tremendous business it is today.

Merchandising New Items

In selecting a new line or item to carry at the theatre stand, both independent and concessionaire should follow the rule-of-thumb that it should have a reasonable initial cost and a reasonable labor cost, the two combined not exceeding the current average for a similar item.

Also, it must be determined whether the new item will create more sales, or whether it will compete with an item presently sold to the detriment of each. Most important, it must fill a need. Although the concessionaire wants to offer maximum variety, it must be a practical, workable variety of the kind that does not burden him with so many individual items that he cannot do a good job of promoting any of them. In addition to creating sales, the new item should be a higher unit sale. "Meatless" frankfurters, for instance, are not a practical stock for the concessionaire because they are normally sold only on Friday. An exhibitor may sell them, however, as an accommodation, even though he may suffer losses through spoilage due to overstocking.

Again, in selecting a new item, it is important to make sure that the existing refreshment stand operation has sufficient facilities for its preparation, sale, and merchandising, and that new equipment, if it must be acquired, is practical from an economic and space standpoint. French fries are an example of this. They are a big seller and a good profit item. They are generally non-competitive with existing items. But, they do require a great deal of preparation and storage equipment, and incur additional labor costs. You may well find in analyzing the introduction of a new item that you have to take the bitter with the sweet, and that the decision cannot always be made on a clear-cut basis.

There are three methods which must be tried in launching a new item at the theatre stand. They are:

- 1) A good trailer, preferably animated and in color.
- 2) Sampling: this is an often-neglected device which can pay off. Offering a sample of some kind is extremely important.
- 3) Verbal and physical merchandising, such as announcements, tapes, signs, and special point-of-purchase display, if possible.

Cafeteria vs. Station System

It seems to be pretty well agreed today that the cafeteria system does not belong at every drive-in and it is, as yet, unproven in the conventional theatre.

The proponents of the station system claim that they can take in as many cents per person as is customary with the cafeteria system, and without investing in costly display and serving equipment. (Both systems require approximately the same investment in food preparation equipment).

Those who favor the cafeteria system grant that this is possible, but only, they say, with an exceptionally well trained personnel who make up in suggestive selling what has been lost through lack of display. Personally, I favor the investment in serving equipment because it is a proven method of achieving success.

For either system, expert advice in design and layout, and in research and development, also are essential. Neither system is a haphazard one. Originality and progressiveness long ago proved that they pay off, and a good case in point in the "Caferama" at the Shipyard Drive-In. Here, the architect came up with the idea of a circular cafeteria building which, through its shape and name, became the focal point of the theatre operation.

It remains to be reemphasized, however, that even with the best setting in the theatre refreshment business, you have nothing without good food at a fair price. The basic premise to be considered, indoors and outdoors, independent or concession, is that the operation be the best possible in conception and kept the best possible in operation.

New Products Review

Some Thumbnail Descriptions of Selected Products Which Have Interesting Possibilities for Theatres

PROJECTION AND SOUND

New Century Mechanisms

Century Projector Corporation has been marketing for the last year a new line of Century projector mechanisms which take the place of the Model C and Model CC units. The new mechanisms are the Model H (single shutter) and Model HH (double shutter).

The simplicity, sturdiness, and long life features of the former Model C and Model CC mechanisms have been retained, it is reported. The new mechanisms include advances and improvements developed for such media as Cinerama, Horizontal VistaVision, and Cinemiracle.

Incorporating as standard equipment many new features, the Models H and HH are patterned on mechanisms designed for non-standard film widths, and can therefore be modified for use with wide films, whenever such films are available commercially, it is said.

CENTURY MODEL H MECHANISM

70 mm Reels

Goldberg Brothers recently introduced 22-inch diameter cast aluminum reels for 70mm projection. These reels have a seven-inch hub, one half inch core, and four holes located on the side of the flange for pin driving. Each reel holds approximately 2,400 feet of film.

Also available is the same cast aluminum reel for 35mm, with 70mm adapter attached solidly. The 35mm reel has a 16⁷/₈ inch diameter, five inch hub, and has four holes located on the side of the adapter for pin driving. This unit holds approximately 2,700 feet of film.

Hertner Transverter

Good screen light is noticed and long remembered by theatre patrons. One means of achieving this is the Hertner "HH-125" Transverter, which is designed to supply the properly corrected direct current for projection arcs operating nominally at 75 to 125 amperes, 42 to 65 arc volts. Built-in close control results in a clear flickerless white light with complete absence of ripple, it is said.

The complete unit consists of motor generator, separate wall mounted control panel ("Type G" illustrated), separate dual ballast rheostat, and separate motor starter for greater installation flexibility.

Micronic Light Control

The new Ashcraft Micronic Light Control for the Super Cinex projection lamp is a precise device for exact maintenance of the carbon crater, which is the source of light, at a predetermined position from the elliptical reflector used in the Cinex. It maintains light level and the distribution of light over the screen surface with unvarying accuracy, it is said, yet the values may be changed immediately by the operator. Complete technical details can be secured from the

C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Company.

Screen Brightness Meter

The Panavision Brightness Meter, licensed for manufacture by the Motion Picture Research Council, Inc., is said to represent a new high in versatile and foolproof design in light-measuring instruments. Its small size, light weight, and attractive price put it within reach of all exhibitors to test theatre screens regularly for brightness, gain, and brightness distribution.

The meter's primary function is the measurement of brightness as expressed in "foot-Lamberts," but by plugging in a photo-electric attachment, incident light may be measured directly in "foot-candles." The use of the Panavision unit provides an objective analysis of conditions which can be determined only with a brightness instrument.

Kneisley Sil-Tubes

The Kneisley Electric Company, in extending its comprehensive line of Sel-Tube (selenium) and Sil-Tube (silicon) Conversions, has announced the addition of Sil-Tubes for Exciter Lamp Supplies which now employ five and six ampere, half-wave, gas-filled tubes.

These units are designed in such a manner that you simply remove the gas-filled tubes and screw the Sil-Tubes into the same sockets. A minor adjustment in the voltage connections is required due to the increased efficiency of silicon over gas-filled rectifier tubes.

HERNER TRANSVERTER CONTROL PANEL

GOLDBERG 70mm REEL

PEREY TURNSTILE SYSTEM

The manufacturer states this to be an excellent application for silicon as the load is a straight resistance load, not subject to voltage transients or current surges.

Silicon has the advantages of lower power consumption with efficiencies upward of 98 per cent, is guaranteed to be non-aging, and is hermetically sealed against moisture. It is expected that silicon will have an almost unlimited life in this application, it is said.

MANAGEMENT

Economy For Suburban Theatres

Suburban and neighborhood exhibitors seeking new ways to reduce overhead have incorporated successfully a turnstile system of admissions which eliminates the expense of a doorman-ticket taker. This system handles peak crowds efficiently, automatically records transactions, and is said to be so accurate that it is acceptable to the Internal Revenue Service for tax purposes.

A separate register is used to record children's admissions; thus, adult admissions can be calculated exactly by deducting the total of children's admissions from the total figure on the register. Changes in admissions are simply handled by taking a reading of the number of admissions at the time of the rate change. The Perey Turnstile is always a two-way type for exit in case of emergency.

"DOOR BLANKET" SYSTEM

Theatres adopting the Perey system, in addition to cutting doorman payroll, also eliminate ticket manipulations and pilfering by the cashier and the cost of ticket machines and ticket boxes, assuring a reliable count on admissions even in the event of absentee management, it is said.

Pocket-Size Calculator

A 10-key "personal calculator" that adds, subtracts, multiplies and divides, yet weighing only six pounds and priced modestly, has been introduced by the Bohn Duplicator Corporation.

The BDC Contex is manually-operated, but has no "handle" in the ordinary sense. Its actuating bar is similar to the motor bar on electric machines. It is depressed with the palm of the hand, without removing the fingers from the keyboard. The patented actuating principle that makes this possible also enables the BDC Contex to attain speeds that equal or exceed those of electric machines, it is said.

It has a capacity of ten digits entered, eleven total. Standard 10-key operation is used. Sub-totals are shown at every step, and subtraction is direct. The BDC Contex was developed to provide calculator convenience and efficiency at a price justifying its use on every desk. With an over-all size of 10 by seven by 3½ inches and its six-pound weight, it can be carried in a briefcase.

Floor Sweeper

A labor-saving, 66 inch floor sweeper for large areas in and around concession stands and other areas of the theatre offers tremendous savings in man hours, according to the manufacturer, Thompson and Sons, Inc.

The frame of the "King Speed Sweeper" is steel tubing plated with copper, nickel, and chrome. The side pieces extend to form two handles at a convenient operating height and cross pieces and side braces give the unit great strength, it is said. The bottom of the frame is in the shape of a wide, flattened "V" to which is tied the dry mop.

In use, the operator merely pushes the sweeper. The ball bearing wheels do away with all friction or resistance. The weight of both the unit and the operator is supported on the wheels.

New Stair Tread

The development of a long-wearing stair tread with a molded nose has been announced by American Mat Corporation. The tread, which presents an attractive diamond design, is produced of Do-All rubber and cord compound. It will be available with either rounded or square nose. Black in color, the treads are one-quarter inch thick and come in widths up to 36 inches. Maximum depth is 24 inches with a standard depth of 12 inches. A 36 inch by 24 inch landing mat of the same material and design is being distributed for use with the treads.

Sign Rotator

A completely new, low priced rotating assembly called "Roto-Mount" has been introduced that is designed to handle signs up to 45 square feet and can run continuously. In addition to providing a new economical means for the installation of new rotating signs, conversion of existing stationary signs can be accomplished rapidly through one simple weld, it is said.

Roto-Mount uses a one-quarter horsepower motor with a heavy duty gear box and chain drive. The entire unit is contained in a heavy gauge metal box approximately 19 inches by 10 inches by 10 inches.

ROTO-MOUNT ASSEMBLY

"Door Blanket" System

Dunham-Bush engineers have developed a "door blanket" air system using one of their "HU" heating and ventilating units to eliminate cold drafts where entrance doors must open and close frequently, even in cold weather.

These HU units supply air through a duct to a grille above the door and blanket the door opening with heated air; the air is pulled back to the unit from floor grilles located within the theatre on both sides of the entrance. This flow of air acts as an insulation medium, eliminating cold drafts and maintaining an even temperature inside the theatre.

Since the entire system is designed to be unobtrusive, the entrance is unchanged.

Sanibag Dispensers

A means of eliminating costly plumbing repair bills which frequently result from the disposing of sanitary napkins in theatre toilets is offered by Melro. This concern is marketing the Sanibag, which is supplied in an attractive, self dispensing box. The inexpensive Sanibags are neat and hygienic, and can be disposed of with their contents in the theatre's washroom waste container. Two dispensers and 100 bags are available for a nominal sum as samples. The manufacturer states that for less than three quarters of cent per Sanibag, plumbing bills of as much as $10 can be saved with this service.

FOR DRIVE-IN THEATRES

Litter Bug, Jr.

A new, lower-priced Litter Bug with narrower pick-up, designed for smaller requirements and tight spaces, has been announced by Mid East Sales Company, manufacturer of the original Litter Bug now widely used in drive-ins. Known as the Litter Bug, Jr., the new model offers the additional feature of rubber-tired casters on the pick-up housing to prevent scraping the surface being cleaned. It has a 24-inch wide pick-up, as compared to 30-inch for the larger model, making it ideal for cost and maneuverability on small premises, where only intermittent use is necessary, or for tight spaces and narrow aisles, it is said.

Accounting Systems

EPRAD, Inc., has announced a completely re-designed and field-proven counting and boxoffice accounting system line. The theatre owner may specify any or all of these EPRAD features: tabulation of the number of cars through each boxoffice; total cars entered through all boxoffices; counter which deducts cars leaving theatre, thus providing an actual cars in the theatre count; tabulation of transactions of each boxoffice; and total boxoffice transactions. All counters are key reset so only the supervisor can clear the count. System is sold complete with switch mats made of Neoprene rubber bonded to a Thixon coated steel plate.

EPRAD Model #22125, illustrated, counts cars that enter a theatre having one boxoffice and two entrance lanes.

Motiograph Speaker

Beauty of design is coupled with high fidelity quality sound in a new high impact plastic in-car speaker introduced by Motiograph, Inc.

The shock-proof construction resists breaking, chipping, and denting of the housing, and assures long service and lasting beauty, it is said. It will withstand rough handling and abuse that would quickly incapacitate and destroy the appearance of a die cast aluminum housing, and the finish is unaffected by sun, rain, snow, or high or low temperatures. The use of high quality components assures faultless performance.

Measuring six and one half inches high by four inches wide, and two and three-quarter inches deep, the speaker is equipped with a convenient handle for ease in handling. The hanger is shaped to fit practically all makes and models of junction boxes.

TWEEDY SCREEN

Traffic Paint

A tough new traffic paint said to provide brilliant, long-lasting traffic markings on asphalt, macadam, concrete, cobblestone, and tarred road surfaces common to drive-in areas has been introduced by the Consolidated Chemical and Paint Manufacturing Company, Inc. Tests reveal the new enamel provides markings comparable in brilliance to costly beaded traffic paints and, at the same time, affords far greater resistance to wear and abrasion, it is said.

New "Jet-Dri" has been tested for road wear and driver visibility. Applications reveal the product retains its high lustre and bright color under consistently heavy traffic conditions. Unlike conventional traffic paints which require complicated bead mixing procedures, new Jet-Dri is applied in one operation, affording substantial cost and time savings. Because it dries in minutes, truck and auto tires leave no imprint on Jet-Dri surfaces.

"Shadow-Box" Screen

The El Mag Screen System, developed by the Tweedy Screen Corporation, makes it possible for drive-in exhibitors, especially those in daylight saving time areas or those located in the extreme portion of a time zone, to advance program starting times up to one hour. The device also reduces bothersome outside lighting and affords a sharper picture, while eliminating shiny rainspots, saving costly repainting jobs, and is practical anywhere except where the screen faces west. The El Mag System is a combination of shadow box, electro-magnetic, and hydraulic principles. Inexpensive to operate, it uses electricity and water from existing facilities, and can be installed by job-site methods.

Eprad Speakers

EPRAD, Inc., has announced a new drive-in speaker with features found only in speakers costing dollars more. The "Merit" is made of diecast metal, with a four inch driver unit featuring a heavy 1.47 oz. ALNICO five permanent magnet. Other value features are a silicone treated driver unit, full cork gasket, and quick disconnect terminals.

EPRAD also has introduced the "HiFi," a quality produced speaker at reasonable cost. A new line of fiberglass speakers named the "Mellotone" and the "Humdinger" are molded from Navy crashboat-type fiberglass.

The Coca-Cola Company's new Dole Citation Dispenser has been making a gala debut in recent months across the country.

Summer Candy

Although old in name, Polar, one of Hollywood Candy's long-popular summer bars, is now made from an entirely new recipe. According to F. A. Martoccio, president, it has a center of white vanilla nougat, loaded with fresh toasted almonds, a topping of caramel, and rich dark bittersweet malted milk coating.

Results from test-sampling are very encouraging, the company states. Like the companion bars, Zero and Sno-King, it is made to satisfy summer tastes and stand up under summer heat . . . with no danger of spoilage in transit, no change in color, taste or texture when on display.

Polar is made in the five cent size only. Shipping started last month and will continue through the summer.

Barrel Dispenser

Selmix Dispensers, Inc., recently announced its new co-polymer high impact styrene two carbonated drink ice cooled barrel dispenser.

This barrel presents a revolutionary concept of drink dispensing from a bright new package. Being of high eye catching color combinations, it attracts additional customers and creates all important impulse-sales, it is said. The merchandising value of the Selmix barrel practically obsoletes its forerunner, the wooden type keg.

An optional feature is a complete carbonator built into the unit, making it self-contained. This innovation simplifies the installation of the barrel, whereby the only connections necessary are water, CO₂ gas, and electricity. It is that simple. The barrel incorporates the Selmix stainless steel valve and gravity syrup system. Cooling is provided by a Cold Plate containing 50'-0" stainless steel tubing. Two 2-gallon syrup tanks provide syrup for approximately 500 drinks. Its 75 lbs. ice capacity provides continuous cooling of 10-12 six ounce drinks per minute.

Complete Pizza Service

More and more theatres are doing big business with pizza, which lends itself excellently to profit producing beverage-food tie-ins. A high-profit item that can be prepared in a matter of minutes, the refreshment stand operator does not have to take any special course in Italian cooking to produce pizza, which is prepared in advance by manufacturers for cooking in specially designed, compact ovens of several varieties.

The crust, sauce, cheeses, and spices which are part-and-parcel of pizza go naturally with carbonated beverages, and theatres which have installed pizza facilities have found that sales from fountain dispensers and automatic vendors of drinks have increased sharply.

Two pizza sources of supply for theatres are the Original Crispy Pizza Company and Arena Real Pizza Crust, Inc.

Nestlé Dispenser

"Hot Nestle's in a Jiffy!" is now a reality with the new Nestle's Chocolator. At the flick of a button, this dispenser mixes a cup of Nestle's hot chocolate in six seconds. The Nestle Chocolator is designed to greatly increase operators' profits per cup through labor economy and bulk pack savings over envelope service.

The Chocolator holds enough powder for eighty drinks. Its serving capacity is sixty drinks per hour. Serving requirements above this figure can be accommodated by the installation of an inexpensive pre-heater on the incoming cold water line.

HOLLYWOOD'S POLAR BAR

Compact Gas Broiler

A new line of Compact Counter Model "Glo-Brick" Charco Gas Broilers (Series 50), manufactured by Bakers Pride Oven Company, Inc., is designed to give meats the true char-broiled flavor, aroma, and appearance, without the use of charcoal. Counter models are manufactured in one to three grate sizes, and are also available in floor models.

The efficiency of these units is assured by exclusive features: new concealed internal grease drain system through the entire length of the unit; new type burners that work more efficiently with all types of gas; new multi-level salamander broiling rack, for toasting buns, braising, and pan broiling seafoods; new convenient gas feed connection arranged on bottom or back of unit, permitting flush installation.

Multi-Purpose Broiler

Clark Industries' infra-red "Vita-lectric" Broiler is a multi-purpose unit especially suited to conventional and drive-in theatre use.

Not only does the Vita-lectric broil hamburgers, hot dogs, cheeseburgers, and hot ham, bacon, and cheese sandwiches without grease and with all juices retained, but it also is adaptable for the preparation of small, individual pizzas, another high profit item. The broiler is said to cook fast and fresh, without fumes, and no vent is needed. A flasher sign mounted on the top attracts patrons' attention.

EDITOR'S COMMENT

While every effort has been made by repeated mailings and even by long distance telephone to achieve a high degree of accuracy and uniformity in the domestic, Canadian, and foreign theatre supply dealer entries which follow, it has been impossible to secure the 100 per cent cooperation of the dealers themselves in confirming, revising, or amplifying the information in these FREE listings.

With the assistance of most of the large concerns with branch offices in the U. S. and affiliates overseas, we have been able to supply up-to-the-minute information on such outlets. Other dealers who have not confirmed, revised, or amplified their listings as requested are indicated by an asterisk (*).

analysis. Although many factors govern the type and location of acoustical treatment, the the following rules are generally observed for proper design:

- 1. Concave rear walls, parallel side walls, and parallel ceiling-floor combinations should be avoided. They result in objec-tionable reflections of sound.
- 2. Walls and ceilings can be contoured to provide proper diffusion without hindering the efficient transmission of sound to the rear of the room.

- 3. Absorptive materials should be applied to the rear walls to eliminate "slap-back."
- 4. Wall areas behind the screen should be covered with highly sound-absorptive material to prevent radiation of sound from behind the amplifier to the audi-ence.
- 5. Projection booth interior surfaces should be heavily treated with an in-combustible acoustical material.
- 6. As the average audience is reduced due to a wider spacing of seats for increased customer comfort, additional absorptive materials in the form of interior acous-tical finishes must be employed in order to maintain the proper acoustical effect.

The Motion Picture Research Council has made available to anyone interested a com-plete summary of recommendations covering proper viewing and listening conditions for motion picture exhibitors. With the competi-tion offered by other forms of entertainment today, a second look at the sound condition-ing of your theatre could be of great value to you.

In Re-recorders... Westrex presents a
NEW DIMENSION OF SOUND QUALITY

Westrex RA-1570-A
Re-recorder

These new Westrex equipments give you:

- Magnetic and photographic film paths at separate scanning points
- 3000-foot reel capacity
- Fast rewind
- Minimum maintenance cost

These Westrex re-recorders have been designed to record and reproduce single magnetic tracks on 35mm, 17½mm or 16mm film... to reproduce standard photographic tracks on 35mm, 17½mm or 16mm film... to reproduce double-width push-pull photographic tracks on 35mm or 17½mm film.

The controls are arranged for quick accessibility and for simplicity of operation with fast run-down to the desired location for interlock operation.

The new magnetic-optical pre-amplifier provides reproduction from either standard or double-width variable-area track or from magnetic track at the same nominal output level.

The plug-in amplifier provides a flat or pre-equalized low-end characteristic. Equalization is adjustable for optical scanning and transfer losses.

Provision is made for interlock operation, either with or without a distributor, and for independent synchronous operation.

Selective post-equalization is provided which is complementary to the several magnetic recording characteristics employed in the industry today.

A QUESTION OF "EARNED FILM RENTAL"

IT IS DIFFICULT to understand all of the furore and excitement that was caused by Bill Heineman's full dress presentation to the trade press of United Artists' sales policies. There was nothing very new about the six clauses, except that all or nearly all of United Artists' production partners were represented to hear them delineated. As a matter of fact, we're pretty certain that each and every one of the six clauses are covered in much greater detail in the standard exhibition contract that is a part of all film licenses.

Most theatremen will agree that every picture should be bought "on terms based upon their individual merits" as box-office attractions. Most theatremen will agree that "earned film rentals, on percentage or flats, as per the terms of the contract" should be paid promptly by exhibitors. Most theatremen will agree that exhibitors should not make "their own adjustments," and should not withhold "earned rentals" in order to force adjustments. Most theatremen will agree that should an exhibitor "withhold unreasonably," then United Artists, or any other distributor, certainly has the right to stop selling him. And most theatremen will agree that whenever "some relief or revision of the percentage terms are justified," such relief should be given. Maybe what most theatremen don't agree with is the distributor meaning placed on some of these phrases, or the way in which they are made to operate in every-day use.

For example, what are the "individual merits" that should dictate film "terms"? Are they the length of the show in feet or minutes? Are they its esthetic qualities or artistic perfections? Are they the production dollars that some producer invested in making it? Or, are they the supposed audience that awaits it, and that will be willing to kitty up a gross patronage that bears relationship to the asking price? We choose to believe it is the latter. And we think that Mr. Heineman, or any other honorable businessman will agree.

If we are right, then what are "earned film rentals" based on such "terms"? Are they an arbitrary percentage, based on a "blue sky" guess that there will be a waiting audience, and that such an audience will be willing to pay a guessed-at high gross? Or, are such "earned film rentals" a fair share of the actual gross, resulting from an actual audience, that did in fact purchase tickets?

And, if a picture has been honestly sold on its "individual merits," and if it has delivered the audience traffic that was claimed for it, why should any theatreman be clown enough to deliberately withhold its "earned film rental," or why should he entertain any thoughts of an adjustment? Any exhibitor who does deserves to be discontinued as a customer. He even ought to be sued for every penny due. Certainly, no able bodied man with self respect should be permitted to pick a distributor's pocket, or to make inordinate profits out of "hat in hand" begging.

But we don't believe these are the facts. Product scarcities that keep the theatreman hungry for playable features, plus the old-style con-man sales methods of some film men, that urge the ignoring of the letter of film contracts with such phrases as: "Do it for me!" "Sign it, and I promise that we'll take a look!" "Sure, we'll review it down to 30 per cent!" "Havent we always treated you right?," and "You know I won't let you get hurt!" are much more the rule. These are the sloppy sales methods that start the requests for adjustments. And if Mr. Heineman's sales highlights accomplished nothing else they should alert theatremen to the need to negotiate clean deals in the first place.

May we suggest to Mr. Heineman, and to all other film sales executives everywhere, that if their only concerns are "earned film rentals," there is no better method of insuring them than "sliding scale" selling based on annually audited theatre overheads, with the C.P.A. appointed by the distributor, and the bill paid by the exhibitor. Then they will have their major share of any honest gross, with all the cards face up on the table, and they will have their theatre customers to come back to and to sell again next year.

But then, we are sure that Bill Heineman et al are not concerned with pocketing "un-earned film rentals."

So, what's all the shouting about?

Has anything really changed?

UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL	11 features
BUENA VISTA	6 features

Of course, all of the interviews and researches that resulted in these totals took place in February, so that there may be many changes, additions and subtractions, between March 1 and Jan. 1, 1960. By the same token, there may be even less than the 162 features here delineated. But, if they prove to be reasonably accurate, more than 50 percent of all supplies will come from the first three companies alone.

Other interesting facets are: 75 of the 162 are scheduled to be in color, 42 are scheduled for CinemaScope or some other wide screen process, and five are scheduled for 70mm. Technirama.

But these are our potential supplies. Let's hope they are all the powerful drawing cards that their distributors hope for. Something like 162 "Dogs" or "Hots"!

Letters . . .

UNSOLICITED • The letters from readers which appear on this page are not solicited. MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR does not suggest questions to readers in order to provide a flow of letters.

From ROCHESTER, N. Y.

At the suggestion of William Dipson of the Dipson Theatre Circuit, I want to tell you about a new series of articles titled "WATCHING THE SCREEN" that I am writing weekly for our Catholic Diocesan newspaper, THE COURIER-JOURNAL. The latter weekly aims at a paid circulation of 100,000 families in 1959, and naturally that represents four or five times that number of people.

Since the first of the year I have been reviewing all movies in our downtown theatres, and have been trying to encourage attendance at the good ones. One manager attributes a recent two-week holdover, and a good strong gross, to my individual efforts. When I am given the listing of playdates in other cities of this diocese, I try to work them in so that my column doesn't restrict itself to the city of Rochester, alone.

However, I have been receiving a minimum of cooperation from some quarters. A few exchanges and theatre circuits have gone all out to assist me, but two others didn't even answer my mail when I asked for date listings in order to give a plug to the smaller towns. Naturally, I try to see all movies just as quickly as possible, and I try to get courtesy admissions to the Buffalo theatres that usually play them first. I'm doing what I can, but it is pretty discouraging at times.

I like to think that what I am doing in giving a boost to good films will encourage the production of more of them. I wonder if I am right?

RAY SMITH

The Courier-Journal (Catholic)

EDITOR'S NOTE: Let us hope that the publishing of this letter will bring Mr. Smith's efforts to the industry's attention. Whether Rochester, Buffalo, or New York, the good work of such columnists should be encouraged.

From WAYLAND, N. Y.

The following appeared in the "Letters to the Editor" column of the Rochester Times-Union:

"I have often heard complaints on how noisy the Rochester movie theatres are and have, from time to time, witnessed this in even the finest of our downtown theatres. The cause of the noise I believe can justifiably be placed on the children—teen-age and younger—who frequent our theatres.

"However, a new approach was shown me when I took my little nephew to the Waring Theatre on a recent Sunday. The children and young adults of high school age at the theatre were making quite a bit of noise during the main feature and it was difficult to hear.

"It was then that the lights went on, the sound off, and the manager of the theatre came on the stage to tell the audience that the picture would remain off until they behaved like ladies and gentlemen. He apologized to those for whom his message was not intended. When he had made his point, he allowed the picture to resume.

"The result was an immediately quieter theatre and a much more enjoyable afternoon for me and many other Rochester citizens.

"My most sincere thanks and appreciation are extended to the manager of the Waring Theatre."

I am wondering whether such action is generally approved? In my younger days I was trained into believing that the floor staff should be able to control noise, and that the manager would only be put in a bad psychological position by such drastic intervention. What is your viewpoint?

JIM RUSSELL, Manager Legion Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: We agree, and the manager of the Waring Theatre probably joins us, that small disturbances are the responsibility of the ushers. And if the staff can't handle such matters, then get a new staff. But this was apparently a large disturbance that demanded large attention. The manager obviously must have handled himself pretty well, for he got attention and respect. Some theatres even find it necessary, as the next step, to use policemen.

From RENFREW, ONTARIO, CAN.

May I voice a special vote of thanks for the saveable pink EXPLOITATION section of your trade paper? There have been many times during the past year when this section has come to my aid, and has provided the needed promotion when I was looking for something new and different. So I now want to offer some of my own efforts for consideration in your "SHOWMAN-OF-THE-YEAR" Contest. Maybe they will assist other managers, just as the writers to your paper have helped me.

D. J. FEVREAU, Manager
O'Brien Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: And this is the very point of the every-second-week saveable EXPLOITATION section. Those who benefit, contribute!

From INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Consistently, year after year, MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR has built a reputation for accuracy, and for the best in reviewing service.

From CLEVELAND, OHIO

I notice that many of your subscribers refer to their need for pink REVIEWS and/or yellow SERVICESECTIONS for the years prior to 1950. By contrast, I am interested in a list of all short subjects from 1940 through 1950. Is such a list available? Or might it be possible to get year-end issues of the pink REVIEWS for each year, and thereby get such information? For faithful Exhibitorreading I would appreciate such information, and its cost.

JACK WACHUTA

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sorry, But, other than our very complete office records back to 1936, we have nothing we could sell or ship to anyone prior to the complete 1954-55 film season. The last five complete seasons are available to subscriber purchase at 52 cents per season.

From DECATUR, GA.

Many, many thanks for MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR. And especially for the saveable EXPLOITATION section.

CHARLES W. WEBB, Manager
Decatur Theatre

From URBANA, O.

I cherish the two Achievement Citations that I won from your EXPLOITATION Section in 1958, and I intend to win more. In my humble opinion MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR is the best trade paper there is. I take one other, but all it is good for is wiping the lens in the booth. And congratulations on your 40th Anniversary. May you have 540 more!

WILLIAM H. BEAN

Gloria Theatre, and Bean Promotions Co.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Good luck to you. And should our paper ever deteriorate to that lens wiping chore, we know you won't bother to renew your subscription.

From BRUSH, COLO.

I am enclosing my payment for another subscription to a fine trade paper. I note from time to time that MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR is a little thin and scanty, but I guess we all have our good and bad weeks. Keep up the good work on that editorial page, and on your endless search for top showmanship.

JOE MACHETTA, Owner-Manager
Emerson Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: You're right about the thick and thin. Just look at that April 1 issue, with its three sections, for a total of 130 printed pages.

From SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Just to make your extremely comprehensive reviewing system moreso: "THE COSMIC MONSTERS" reviewed in the Feb. 11 pink REVIEWS section is the same picture as "THE CRAWLING TERROR" which you had already reviewed in the July 9, 1958 issue.

And "THE CRAWLING EYE," also reviewed last Feb. 11, is one and the same as "CREATURES FROM ANOTHER WORLD," which you had already reviewed in the Sept. 3, 1958, issue.

Confusing, isn't it?

J. E. TILLMANY

EDITOR'S NOTE: Yes! And if you will check the letter from Frank Morris, Sumner Theatre, Brooklyn, N.Y., as published in the March 4 issue, you will note how such switches occur. Sorry! We guess it is one of the penalties for being complete.

All Variety Officers Reelected By Acclaim

LAS VEGAS—All Variety Club International officers were reelected by unanimous acclamation of the delegates to the 32nd annual convention.

George Eby, Pittsburgh, continues as international chief barker; and others returned to office are Edward Emanuel, Philadelphia, first assistant; Rotus Harvey, San Francisco, second assistant; Ezra Stern, Los Angeles, dough guy; and Jimmy Carreras, London, property master.

C. J. Latta, London, and International 'Big Boss' John Harris were among concluding speakers at the final business session, which voted thanks to Las Vegas for its hospitality.

The convention voted a resolution prohibiting any Tent from affiliating with federated or national health drives, and established a committee which will encourage editorial recognition of Variety's work with special awards to be made annually in all media.

The Heart Award citation went to New York for its sponsorship of the Institute of Applied Biology which is conducting research on what is described as the first major breakthrough in the fight against cancer.

Washington's establishment of a new center for research into every disease afflicting children was voted special citation.

Greater Miami, Florida, won over Dublin, Ireland, in a spirited contest for the 1961 convention.

Schine Pays Contempt Fines

BUFFALO—Schine Theatres paid $68,000 in fines for criminal contempt of court stemming from an anti-trust suit. The payment ended a long dispute over the contempt citation, which was taken to the Supreme Court. That tribunal refused to review it.

Still pending is the federal government's civic contempt suit against the circuit.

"Maja" Vs. P.O.—Round 2

WASHINGTON—The Post Office Department seized thousands of United Artists postal card reproductions of Goya's painting "The Naked Maja" on the grounds that the cards are "obscene, lewd, lascivious or filthy, and therefore nonmailable."

A hearing on their mailability will be held before the Judicial Officer of the Post Office Department on April 10, at the Post Office Department Building, Washington.

The cards were addressed to editors, film critics, feature writers, columnists, and theatre owners throughout the United States and Canada. They are part of UA's advertising campaign which previously created an issue with the Post Office Department in connection with use of full page reproductions of Goya's nude painting in newspaper and trade paper ads.

Allied Hits New UA Sales Policies

Special Meeting On April 18 To Consider Current Problems; Legality Questioned In Concerted Producer Action

WASHINGTON — Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors board of directors will hold a special meeting in the Washington Hotel on April 18, it was announced last fortnight by Horace Adams, president, and Abram F. Myers, board chairman.

The meeting was said to have been called due to the Allied claim that there is urgent need for putting the Association back into operation after being "stalled on dead center" and not functioning in the interest of its members; and due to the position of the theatres in the industry steadily deteriorating. Allied has been waiting for effective action from ACE, it was pointed out.

The film companies, encountering no determined resistance from exhibitors, are running amuck, the report stated. Virtually all pictures above run-of-mill are being specially handled in one way or another, and as a result, the product is burned up before reaching the theatres that must play on general release. Moreover, in some areas, theatres are being arbitrarily zoned and bidding is being forced where it never existed before, it was reported.

According to Allied States, the Board is going to concern itself with: "How better can an exhibitor's ability to pay be determined than by an analysis of a picture's performance in his theatre after close of the engagement; in view of past experiences and current attitudes, does anyone seriously believe that, after an exhibitor has dug into capital to pay the contract terms for an oversold picture, he is going to get a refund from the film company?"

Allied continues that United Artists' recently announced sales policy, featuring no "look-see," would be bad enough if taken by a single company in regard to its own output. But George J. Schaefer, Seymour Poe, Morris Lefko, and David E. Weshner, the sales representatives of independent producers releasing through UA, endorsed the UA policy. The question now arises — just how much of the normal competitive effort that should be exerted by these producers as regards conditions and terms of license can be restrained or eliminated by agreement without running afoul of the law? A joint distributing agency for several producers is one thing, but when that agency prescribes uniform conditions and terms of sale for those pictures, and they agree thereto, a different question is presented, Allied said.

S.C. Seeks Sunday Movies

SPARTANBURG, S.C.—A bill was introduced in the House last fortnight to legalize Sunday movies and sports. The bill would make Sunday movies legal in areas "served by television stations on Sunday with hours not to conflict with Sunday morning and evening church services."

Under present law, some cities under special circumstances are allowed to show Sunday movies if situated near a military installation or if a county referendum shows that voters approve.

Adams Leaves ITOO Post For Health; Fine Succeeds

CLEVELAND—Horace Adams announced last fortnight that due to his health and with the acquiescence of the board of the ITO of Ohio, he had designated vice-president Marshall Fine, Cleveland, to act in his stead for the balance of his presidential term.

In connection with National Allied, of which he is also president, Adams said he had "no comment" other than that he would attend the board meeting in Washington later this month, and might have an announcement to make at that time.

20th-Fox Promotes Moskowitz, Norris

NEW YORK—Alex Harrison, general sales manager of 20th Century-Fox, last week announced the promotion of Martin Moskowitz and Glenn Norris to the posts of assistant general sales managers.

Previously eastern and central-Canadian division managers respectively, Moskowitz and Norris will continue to aid Harrison in national sales planning as well as assuming additional specialized distribution duties. First special assignment will be the responsibility for the sales handling of two of 20th-Fox's most important releases of the year, "South Pacific" and "The Diary of Anne Frank."

Norris will be in charge of "South Pacific" plans in its general release to all theatres following a highly successful series of Todd-AO engagements during the past year in key cities of the nation. Moskowitz will supervise the distribution of George Stevens' "The Diary of Anne Frank" which recently had gala premieres in New York and Los Angeles.

Both sales chiefs will devote a major portion of their efforts to launching these top attractions during the next few months. Because of the recently instituted policy of autonomy within the company's sales organization, Moskowitz and Norris will find themselves free to function on a higher national level and devote maximum effort and time to the company's important pictures.

Court Nixes Censor Fee Refund

HARRISBURG—Two motion picture firms have lost their appeal to have the state Board of Finance and Revenue repay to them $11,506 as their proportionate share in maintaining the former State Board of Motion Picture Censors.

The appeals were dismissed by Judge Homer L. Kreider in Commonwealth Court here. Screen Guild Productions of Philadelphia had sought the return of $2,942.25 for the period between 1948 and 1951, and Box Office Pictures, Inc., also of Philadelphia, tried to collect $8,564 for 1947 through 1951.

The Board of Motion Picture Censors was maintained in Pennsylvania at the expense of motion picture producers. It was declared unconstitutional in 1956 by the State Supreme Court.

Judge Kreider upheld a Board of Finance and Revenue contention that the claim for refund came too late because it was not filed within five years of the payment.

NTA Officers Elected As NT Directors

LOS ANGELES—B. Gerald Cantor, chairman of National Theatres, Inc., and John B. Bertero, president, announced the election of Ely A. Landau and Oliver A. Unger, respectively chairman and president of National Telefilm Associates, Inc., a recently acquired National Theatres subsidiary, to the board of directors of the parent company.

William H. Hudson and Burt Kleiner also were elected to the National Theatres board at the same time.

The board declared a dividend on its common stock of 12½ cents per share, payable April 30 to stockholders of record on April 16.

The election of the four new directors followed formal announcement last week that the exchange offer by which National Theatres acquired NTA had become effective. The offer, an exchange of National Theatres warrants and debentures for NTA shares and warrants, has been accepted as of April 1 by holders of more than 76 per cent of the NTA shares outstanding, and holders of more than 57 per cent of the outstanding NTA warrants. The exchange offer expired April 6.

Landau was president of NTA from the beginning of its operations in 1952, until October, 1957, when he became chairman of its board of directors. He was also elected to the executive committee and the operations committee of National Theatres. Unger was executive vice-president of the company from 1954 until October, 1957, when he was elected NTA president. He will serve on the operations committee of National Theatres.

National Theatres and its subsidiaries currently operate about 290 motion picture theatres in 19 states, and own and operate television and radio stations WDAF-TV and WDAF in Kansas City, KMSP-TV in Minneapolis-St. Paul, WNTA-TV, of Newark, N.J., and WNTA (AM and FM) radio stations.

Through the acquisition of NTA, one of the country's largest distributors of films for television, National Theatres now has a library of approximately 565 feature length motion pictures originally produced for cinema distribution. The company also distributes film series and short subjects.

$3,615,000 Sought In Suit

NEW YORK—Eight operators of film theatres here, A. and R. Theatre Corporation, Artistic Theatre Corporation, Central Park Theatre Operating Corporation, Brook Avenue Theatre Operating Corporation, Madison Avenue Theatre Operating Corporation, P. & A. Theatre Corporation, Tiffany Theatre Corporation, and Westchester Theatre Operating Corporation, filed an anti-trust suit in Federal District Court last fortnight.

A conspiracy between distributors of Spanish language films made in Mexico and a group of local exhibitors which forced them out of business is charged, and damages of $3,615,000 are asked.

Named in the alleged conspiracy are Azteca Films, Clasa-Mohme, and Mex-films, Inc., and 24 theatre firms and individuals including Harry Harris, Max A. Cohen, Irving Breimar, the late Morris Goldman, and others. It is charged that Harris now operates a number of the theatres formerly belonging to the plaintiffs.

Broumas, Allied Fight For Sunday Movies

By AL ERLICK

WASHINGTON—John Broumas, Transamerica Theatres, isn't lonely any more. After battling Pennsylvania's Sunday movie law single-handed since June 24, 1956, when he first decided to test the ordinance on behalf of the circuit's State Line Drive-In, State Line, Pa., Broumas is now receiving solid industry support.

Last October, the Supreme Court refused to hear his appeal, but Broumas fought on. Allying themselves with Transamerica in the battle are exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania Allied Theatre Owners, headed by Harry Hendel, who has pledged the group's support.

Campaign strategy will be discussed at a meeting on Tuesday, April 21, at the Governor Hotel Americana Room, Harrisburg, Pa., at 1 P.M. All exhibitors affected by the Pennsylvania Sunday law are invited to attend, as are all others interested in the campaign to win for exhibitors barred from Sunday showings the same rights enjoyed by their more fortunate brothers.

In addition to the Allied support, Broumas says he has received encouraging promises of aid from other high industry sources as well.

Harrisburg is the capital of Pennsylvania and the meeting place of the State Legislature, where attempts to win Sunday movie rights through legislation have failed in the past.

Regardless of the outcome of the meetings, one fact is certain. The fight won't end until an industry victory has been won. Broumas, accustomed to battling alone, is not likely to quit now that the industry he serves is in the battle, too.

For some of the background on the fight for Sunday movies in Pennsylvania and Broumas' long, often private struggle, see "SPOTLIGHT ON A LONELY BATTLE" . . . issue of Oct. 22, 1958.

Tenn. Eliminates Tax

NASHVILLE, TENN. — The Tennessee Legislature has passed a bill eliminating the state's two per cent admission tax, which has been yielding approximately $250,000 a year, COMPO was advised last week. The bill was signed by the Governor, March 11, and becomes effective July 1.

There is also a clause in the bill which eliminates the authority of cities to levy a two per cent tax on theatre admissions. This will prevent municipalities, not now levying such taxes, from imposing them in the future.

The fight for repeal was led by the officers of the Tennessee Theatre Owners Association.

Walter L. Morris, Knoxville theatre owner, who is a member of COMPO's Tax Committee, said: "The elimination of this levy is another instance of the grass roots working to secure relief and primary credit goes to the little man who worked and followed a good organization plan."

Four Units In Joint Meet

CLEVELAND—The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio announced last fortnight that they will join with Allied units in Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia in a four-state convention to be held in September, probably in Indianapolis.

AB-PT Reports Record Income High As Theatre Division Profit Holds

Johnston Hails Defeat Of N.Y. Censor Bills

WASHINGTON—Eric Johnston, president, Motion Picture Association of America, last week hailed the defeat of censorship efforts in New York as a victory for a united industry. He said:

"We have just had another striking demonstration of what can be done when this industry works together unitedly to advance the common interest.

"I am referring to the fact that the New York Legislature has adjourned without passing a single one of the bills to extend censorship and to increase the powers of the state over motion pictures, advertising, and the theatres.

"Too many persons contributed too much to the success of this endeavor to single out any one, but I do want to pay tribute to COMPO, to the Independent Theatre Owners Association, to the Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatres Association, and to the MPAA Advertising and Publicity Directors Committee.

"I think that special honors also go to the trade press for its leadership through powerful editorial support and for its usual splendid coverage of all developments.

"The fight will be won at all times, just as it was won this time, when we stand side by side to repulse all efforts to strangle or destroy our Constitutional rights of freedom of expression.

"We say to all: Censorship has no place in America, and we shall never cease our fight until it is eliminated entirely."

Film Daily Names "Best"

NEW YORK—The Film Daily's "Ten Best" of 1958 were announced last fortnight with all "Oscar" contenders finding places in the 36th annual poll.

Selections are Columbia's "The Bridge On The River Kwai"; MGM's "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof"; MGM's "Gigi"; Warners' "Auntie Mame"; United Artists' "The Defiant Ones"; United Artists' "Witness For The Prosecution"; United Artists' "Separate Tables"; 20th-Fox's "The Long, Hot Summer"; 20th-Fox's "The Young Lions"; and United Artists' "The Big Country."

NEW YORK — American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., set an all-time high in gross income and showed improved earnings for 1958, Leonard H. Goldenson, president of AB-PT, said last week.

In the annual report to stockholders, Goldenson reported improvement in income and earnings for the ABC Broadcasting Division, with the ABC Television Network making the most significant gains in audience and billings in the industry. He also reported profitable improvement for the five owned television stations, a streamlining of the ABC Radio Network operation, profits about equal to last year for the theatre division, a successful year for Am-Par Records, and expansion by ABC Films.

Gross income for the record year of 1958 was $244,821,000, Goldenson said, against $215,877,000 in 1957. Consolidated earnings after taxes in 1958 rose to $6,116,000, or $1.40 per share, from $4,894,000 or $1.10 per share in 1957. Of the 1958 earnings, $772,000 was in net capital gains equal to 19 cents per share. No capital gains were reported in 1957.

ABC operating income in 1958 hit a record high at $136,967,000 against $109,393,000 in 1957. Theatre operating income in 1958 was $94,280,000 compared to $95,280,000 in 1957. Merchandise sales and other income in 1958 was $13,574,000 against $11,204,000 in 1957.

Working capital in 1958 increased to $47,125,000 from $45,848,000 in 1957. Net worth of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres in 1958 was $85,146,000, equal to $18.97 per share, a rise from $83,718,000, equal to $18.62 per share in 1957.

As to theatre business, Goldenson said there is still a wide appeal for top quality motion picture entertainment and pictures with strong audience attraction continue to show substantial box office grosses. He added that 26 theatres were disposed of during the year in keeping with the company's policy to divest marginal properties. The circuit now numbers 511 theatres.

Eastern Acquires N.J. House

NEWARK, N.J.—Continued expansion in the motion picture theatre field with the acquisition of the Elwood, this city, was announced by Sheldon Smerling, executive vice-president of Eastern Theatres.

A deluxe 1500 seat neighborhood theatre, the Elwood is equipped with the latest sound and projection apparatus and has one of the largest silver screens in the state. Extensive remodeling and refurbishing of the interior will be started shortly, but one of the new features that will be offered immediately is free parking. Eastern has taken over some adjacent property, and ample off-street parking facilities will be available to all theatre patrons.

TNT Names Rolley

NEW YORK—William G. Rolley has been named general sales manager of TNT, it was announced today by Nathan L. Halpern, president of TNT (Theatre Network Television, Inc.).

Rolley will direct and supervise the TNT sales personnel in New York and in branch offices throughout the country. He moves to TNT from his post as national sales manager of C.B.S. Station WCAU in Philadelphia.

Record 1,500 Barkers Pack Vegas; Hoover Wins Humanitarian Award

LAS VEGAS, NEV.—Variety Clubs International, the showman's organization which compounds charitable effort with optimism, saw its optimism for a record attendance at the 32nd annual convention fulfilled, with more than 1,500 members pouring into this dazzling capital of fun for four days of non-stop activity.

By day the barkers and their wives concentrated heavily on business, which did not permit even short breaks for basking in the Nevada sun. By evening, the fun spots were teaming with Varieteers for whom eye-popping programs were fashioned by the host tent under the energetic direction of Ernie Cragin.

For the first time in its 32 years of annual meetings, all chief barkers met informally at a breakfast hosted by Eby. Included were not only the heads of Variety's 42 domestic units but Bill Butlin, chief Barker from London; Ireland's Rick Bourk; Mexico City's Roberto Cervantes; and Toronto's Dan Krendel. The international flavor was enlarged with the presence of Chiko Kano, managing editor of Mainichi, Japan's largest newspaper, who expressed his mission as reviving the now dormant Tokyo chapter.

Another addition was a series of forums heavily attended by designated representatives from each tent, in which ways and means of improving all aspects of tent activities were discussed. Philadelphia's Eddie Emanuel was coordinator for these workshop sessions, and discussion leaders included R. L. Bostwick of Memphis, Aaron Seidler of Baltimore, Ralph Pries of Philadelphia, and Ray Bell of New York.

One of Variety's first pieces of business was to reschedule the dates of its Variety Week observances, which barkers from all tents saluted as one of the dynamic activities which helped dramatize Variety's work to the nation. Held for the first time last year in January, all future Variety Week celebration will be held from Feb. 8 to 14.

Eby Outlines VC Work To Be Done This Year

Eby observed that "though my first year as international chief has been filled with delight over Variety's continuing gains, I am impressed by the incalculable amount of work still to be done."

"During the past year," his report stated, "your International officers sought to examine the growth of Variety over a period of 32 years and the great strengths and accomplishments which have been produced. For an organization to grow from 11 men expending some $300 annually for the support of one child, to an organization of 10,000 members expending some three million dollars annually for the health and welfare of many children, it must be apparent that Variety is appealing to a very basic quality in human nature—service to others. Based on that premise," Eby continued, "Variety as an international organization must continue to grow and to expand its charitable efforts."

Eby pointed out that regional meetings which he and other international officers had conducted during the past year, the first such meetings ever held, had generated greater interest and enthusiasm, and that the introduction last year of The Barker, Variety monthly, together with the appointment of an international public relations coordinator in Ray Bell, were part of his program to strengthen services.

The Variety Club of London recently held its seventh annual dinner-dance at the Dorchester Hotel, with the affair netting a profit of approximately 14,000 Pounds. Host was chief barker Bill Butlin, seen handing a gift of diamond cuff links to retiring chief barker Sir Tom O'Brien, as Mrs. Butlin (between the men), and Miss Bernadette O'Brien look on.

J. Edgar Hoover Wins V.C. Humanitarian Award

The gala audience of over 2,000 shouted its approval of J. Edgar Hoover as the 20th recipient of Variety's coveted award for his contributions to the fight against juvenile delinquency. A committee of some of the nation's most distinguished editors, educators, and former recipients was headed by Variety's international fixer, Edward Shafton, of Omaha.

It was announced that a committee of barkers would make the presentation to the FBI director in Washington sometime next month.

San Francisco's delegation of 148 topped all other tents for attendance honors, with the 141 barkers from Los Angeles capturing second honors. Philadelphia and Pittsburgh tents were tied for third with 74 registrants each. London's 26 copped high honors for attendance from overseas.

Review of bylaws for individual tents, constitutional amendments to bring Variety's current practices in keeping with changed requirements, consideration of expansion of Variety's international charities committee, further coordination for common future effort between Variety and the Motion Picture Academy, the intensification of tent publications, and a spirited bid between Miami and Dublin to be chosen as the site for Variety's 1961 convention were among other business highlights.

Golden Reports Contributions For Year Of $2,700,000

One of the convention high spots was the all-day session devoted to Heart Reports, with the chief barker of each tent presenting a five minute verbal summary of the charitable activities of his tent. International heart chairman Nate Golden, Washington, D.C., reported that during 1958 the various tents had contributed $2,700,000 which had directly benefitted 153,000 individuals and countless others indirectly. The year's figures swelled Variety's 32-year charity sums to nearly $78,000,000. It was pointed out that the appointment of Tracy Hare of Miami, as Variety's charities chairman, would assure tents not fully committed to a continuing charity of expert consultation that should enhance the future humanitarian activities of the international organization. Hare is director of the Variety-sponsored Children's Hospital in Miami and is a recognized authority in his field.

The comely Miss Canada presented a proclamation from Ontario's prime minister inviting Varieteers to Toronto, officially chosen for the organization's 1960 convention. John J. Fitzgibbons, who was announced as general chairman for the upcoming convention, added a personal invitation, promising to match the excitement and fun of Las Vegas when barkers met in his city next year.

In addition to the reactivation of the Tokyo Tent, Eby indicated that he expected the dormant tents in Kansas City and Columbus, Ohio, to be revived in succeeding months.

Many of the visitors donned western garb to add to the fun, and the best dressed honors, Western style, went to Jimmy Carreras and Mike Frankovich, usual dandies in London's Piccadilly set, who were the envy of attire-hardened Nevadans.

The social activities were buttressed with invitations to all leading hotels by Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola, which vied with each other in providing hospitality. Tours to Boulder Dam, a fashion show, a boat trip, and special breakfasts and brunches provided a full schedule for the women while the menfolk concentrated on the business sessions. Both sexes converged on the new convention center Friday night for a concluding banquet.

Warner, Schneider Form Production Firm

HOLLYWOOD—Jack M. Warner and Samuel Schneider, former Warner Bros. vice-presidents, announce formation of Jack M. Warner Productions, Inc., to produce feature motion pictures, television series, and commercials, industrial films, and Broadway plays.

Warner, son of Jack L. Warner, has been active in feature film and television production for the past 18 years as a civilian and officer in the Signal Corps, in which he holds the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. His latest production and administrative post was as head of the Warner studio's commercial and industrial film division.

Schneider, former vice-president, treasurer, and director of Warners, served that company continuously for 34 years before opening his own offices.

Officers of Jack M. Warner Productions, Inc., are Schneider, president and treasurer; Jack M. Warner, vice-president in charge of production; and David M. Richman, Beverly Hills attorney, secretary.

Ad Agency Expands

NEW YORK—Charles Schlaifer, president, New York advertising agency bearing his name, announced plans to open a west coast division in Los Angeles and the appointment of James Raker to head it.

Raker for many years was the advertising department manager at Universal Studios, and most recently handled advertising at the Walt Disney Studios.

The Schlaifer agency has for many years represented 20th-Fox and recently was retained by Universal-International. It also represents other accounts.

Editors Honor "Defiant"

HOLLYWOOD—Motion Picture Sound Editors last week at their sixth annual awards luncheon presented awards to sound editors Walter G. Elliot, John Mick and Wayne B. Fury of United Artist's "The Defiant Ones," and to Ed Scheid and Hal Fisher for Warners' TV "Maverick." Samuel Goldwyn was given a life membership.

Veteran Small Town Exhib Launches His Own Public Relations Campaign

ALBANY—A veteran small town exhibitor has launched a campaign via addresses and question-answer periods at dinners and meetings of civic groups, to acquaint the public with the motion picture industry and the problems faced in operating a theatre.

He is George Thornton, who for 34 years has conducted the Orpheum in Saugerties, Catskill Mountain village, and who also runs the Orpheum in Tannersville and the Windham in Windham, during the summer season.

Moved by a letter which a woman wrote to the local paper, critical of several Pre-Vues of Coming Attractions at the Orpheum, and what he thought was her lack of knowledge on significant aspects of the motion picture business, Thornton made a strong, detailed reply, in print.

He also accepted the invitations of Saugerties groups, who "rallied" to his side, and delivered a series of informal talks on "The

Regional Trade Publication Sold To Industry Novice

MINNEAPOLIS — "Greater Amusements," North Central regional trade publication founded by the late T. E. Mortensen, was sold last fortnight by his widow to Frank W. Cooley, who is associated with Miller Publishing Company.

The new owner publishes several trade papers in other fields, but this is his first connection with the motion picture industry.

Ohio Exhibs' Insurance Plan

COLUMBUS, OHIO — The Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio at a board of directors' meeting last fortnight regretfully accepted the resignation of board member and treasurer Charles Sugarman and named Milton Yassenoff, Columbus, to succeed him for the balance of the term. Sugarman resigned due to the pressure of his drive-in theatres.

Additionally, the Association has sponsored a multi-phase insurance program for members. Included in the voluntary program are coverages for either owners or employees of owners. The coverages being offered are basic hospitalization protection; loss of income protection; new catastrophe hospitalization; and an overhead expense protection plan to help pay normal operating expenses in case of accident or sickness. Continental Casualty Company is underwriting the plan.

Columbia Acquires "Raisin"

NEW YORK — Columbia Pictures announced last week the acquisition of the motion picture rights to Lorraine Hansberry's new dramatic hit, "A Raisin in the Sun." The property was Broadway's most-sought-after prize in recent days following the play's opening to unanimous rave reviews. Davis Susskind and Philip Rose will produce.

Motion Picture Industry and the Exhibitor."

Among those whom Thornton addressed were the adult council of Camp Fire Girls; the Jaynees (wives of Junior Chamber of Commerce members); the senior Chamber of Commerce (of which he is a former president); the Monday Study Club (women).

Thornton reported that he found the public to be little acquainted with the modus operandi of a theatre, especially of the manner in which pictures are bought and booked.

He emphasized the Orpheum's policy of "never playing a condemned picture"; not admitting children to the evening shows unless accompanied by parents; the care taken in booking Saturday matinees, when 95 percent of the children's business is registered.

Thornton pleaded, not only in the newspaper letter but in his talks, for the public to "patronize good pictures."

NEW YORK—Hailing the House Interstate Commerce Committee-Federal Communications Commission decision to severely limit the tests of broadcast toll-TV as a great victory for the opponents of pay-television, Philip F. Harling, co-chairman of the Joint Committee on Toll Television, declared the Joint Committee would press the House Interstate Commerce Committee to conduct hearings to completely resolve the toll-TV question.

In an analysis of the F.C.C. letter which accepted the broadcast toll-TV test limitations sought by Representative Oren Harris, chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee and author of the House Joint Resolution banning all forms of toll-TV including cable transmission, Harling declared his committee will now push for the Congressional hearings in order to outlaw cable-TV.

He said the test procedure outlined for broadcast toll-TV was so limiting, should prove so costly to the pay-TV systems, and is so lengthy . . . three years . . . that he feels broadcast toll-TV is effectively stopped for the three years. Further, he said, Congressman Harris was very specific in his report to Congress on the limited test authorization, that the forthcoming tests would in no way make broadcast toll-TV permanent, and that Congress retained the right to decide to permanently ban the broadcast systems after the tests are completed.

Harling said he has been in daily contact with Marcus Cohn, Washington attorney for the Joint Committee, and they agree the limited tests represent a victory for opponents because:

1. Each of the five systems can be tested in only one city, and there are only 20 markets in the entire U.S. with four or more TV stations qualified for tests.

2. Each of the five systems must pay all the costs of installing the system in individual homes, a cost Harling said should be prohibitive. The decision specifically prohibits the systems from passing installation costs on to users.

3. When the F.C.C. first proposed to accept applications for tests in 1957—when none of the present limitations were proposed—none of the systems filed applications. The new limitations are discouraging to the systems.

4. Regardless of whether the tests prove successful or not, Congressman Harris has specified to Congress the tests will not in themselves grant permanency to any system.

5. Congressman Harris has further clearly indicated that the final judgment on whether pay-TV is legal is for Congress to decide.

"We are confident," Harling declared, "that the hearings on the Bill will convince not only the Interstate Commerce Committee and other members of Congress, but the public, that toll-TV in any form would be against the public interest."

"It is now incumbent upon the Joint Committee to press with all forces at its command for hearings by the House Interstate Commerce Committee so that once and for all the matter can be adjudicated by legislation."

State, "Hot" Openings Pump Life Into N. Y.

By MEL KONECOFF
New York Editor

NEW YORK—This city and the industry were twice stimulated last week—when the new Loew's State opened, and again when it opened with "Some Like It Hot." At last report, both were doing wonderfully in this "ideal marriage."

As regards the State, Eugene Picker, newly elected president of the Loew's Circuit, insisted on personally acting as guide, so proud was he of the new flagship. It cost over $850,000 to launch her, but it seems worth every penny of it.

Said Picker, "Aside from the many new and varied demands made on people's leisure time, the theatre's greatest competitor is the living room chair. To compete, we have had to provide better-than-home comfort. This we have done in the 'new' State."

Later, over a drink in his office as the workmen were still tacking down carpeting, painting, tiling, and setting the screen right downstairs, Leopold Friedman, chairman of the board; John Murphy, executive vice-president; and Ernie Emerling, another vice-president with a flair for letter writing, joined a "bull session" which indicated that the State could well be the nucleus of the theatres of tomorrow, as well as a flame that could spark a renaissance of the downtown theatre operation.

The hope was expressed that each theatre in the circuit would get a going-over with an eye towards up-dating, improving, and making it more profitable. Special attention will be paid to seating, staggering them, leaving more room between rows and installing them wider and loaded with foam rubber. In the conversion process, the original 3,400 seat State became a new edition with 1,885 seats.

Next on the circuit to get a bit of face-lifting will be the Capitol, also on Broadway. The outer lobby will be re-floored and the "Loew" carpeting theme will again be utilized. Its seats will be readjusted for the maximum comfort and "see-ability."

It's just good business, says Picker, for re-doing the theatre has increased its value to the distributors, who are all clamoring for representation on the screen, as well as in the real estate classification. The comedy, "Hole In The Head," by Frank Capra, may follow "Some Like It Hot," while "Ben Hur" will premiere in October.

Loew's these days has a new spark and vitality in its new administration. It's out to do business in a big way which could mean ridding itself of unprofitable theatres, adding

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecuff

INVITATION TO HAPPINESS: Henry "Hi" Martin, general sales manager of Universal, reported at lunch that "Imitation of Life" is doing fabulous business. If the 11 dates in the U.S. and the one in Canada are any criterion of its future, he predicted that the return will exceed the $7,250,000 domestic gross that came in on "The Glenn Miller Story."

Word of mouth has proven a big factor, and as the film builds, the mid-week reported business has been way out of proportion with past experiences. Martin said that the presence of other large grossers from other companies has really given the business a shot in the arm, and it was found that a multitude of high grossers acts to the benefit of the others as well as to each other.

People in the 24 to 30 age bracket as well as those 30 to 48, the so-called infrequent audience, are coming in for "Imitation," and a facet is being added to the campaign to bring in the teen-ager as well. This will utilize the presence of Sandra Dee, John Gavin, and Susan Kohner. The multitude of advance screenings for women's groups and opinion makers has really set it going like a house afire. What's also phenomenal is that exhibitors are selling each other on the film, glad to share the tidings now that a big one has come along.

Another factor in its success is believed to be the wholehearted promotion by Lana Turner and the others. In the case of Miss Turner, this is understandable as she gets 50 per cent of the profits. Incidentally, she has never gone out selling before for the simple reason that no one asked her to before. By the way, word of mouth has given the film exceptional business in colored situations where the returns are progressively better as time goes by.

He reported that the company's next biggie will be "This Earth Is Mine," blue-printed along similar lines with the campaign being underway for some months now. Plenty more will be done in the next three months ahead of its release.

DEPARTMENT OF SMELLS: Recently, whenever we would pass the side of Russell Downing's emporium, otherwise known as the Radio City Music Hall, we would notice an odor that was pleasant coming out of the exhaust vents. We thought that the disinfectant was a good one. It should be. It seems it's a new perfume that has been imported from France, and each time the stage revue finale featuring an old-fashioned flower garden comes on, a gallon of it is filtered into the air conditioning system to make things more realistic.

new ones, renovating, and even taking on diversified interests such as real estate, radio and TV stations, etc.

We won't go into the beauty and functionality of the decor at the State for that will be treated in the magazine at the proper time, but we would like to say that this concrete evidence in the faith of the moving picture is a heartening and most encouraging gesture—one that should communicate and spread itself near and far. Our best to all concerned.

P.S. Regarding "Some Like It Hot," the premiere reminded viewers of the old days with crowds jamming the area so that traffic stood still, and near hysteria present among the Saturday night crowds on the Gay White Way.

Extra details of police had to keep the mobs under control while a load of celebs and personalities, including Marilyn Monroe, showed up for the double unveiling. Ernie Emerling, Loew's advertising and publicity head, and his staff did a fine job as did the gang at UA, who worked pretty hard to get the event across.

Wometco Readies Stock Issue

WASHINGTON — Wometco Enterprises Inc., formerly Wolfson-Meyer Theatre Enterprises, Miami, Fla., last fortnight filed a statement with the SEC seeking registration of 325,000 outstanding shares of its Class A common stock, of which 290,000 shares are to be offered for public sale by the holders thereof through an underwriting group headed by Lee Higginson Corporation and the balance of 35,000 shares by such holders initially to officers and employees of the company. The public offering price and underwriting terms are to be supplied by amendment.

The company's new name is to be adopted this month. The company owns and operates TV station WTVJ, Miami, and television station WLOS-TV FM and AM radio station WLOS in Asheville, N. C. It also operates a chain of 22 theatres, as well as the sale of concession merchandise through its own theatres and otherwise.

chairman of the board; Mrs. Benjamin; UA president Arthur B. Krim; William J. Heineman, UA vice-president in charge of distribution; Mrs. Heineman; Roger H. Lewis, UA national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation; Ernie Emerling, Loew's Theatres vice-president; and James Bruno, managing director, Loew's State.

England's Gala Films In Pix Deal With T-L

NEW YORK—An agreement with Trans-Lux Pictures in the United States has been concluded by Gala Film Distributors, Ltd., of England, it was announced by Kenneth Rive, managing director of Gala, who is presently in New York with his co-director, Ben Rose. Negotiations were conducted by Rive with Richard Brandt, president of Trans-Lux Pictures Corporation. Under the terms of the agreement, the two companies will jointly acquire important continental European product for distribution through both organizations.

In a further move to strengthen his American tie-up and prepare for the expansion of Gala's activities in the United States, Rive completed arrangements for the personal representation of Gala Film Distributors, Ltd., in New York by Richard Gordon of Gordon Films, Inc. Gordon will act as liaison for Gala with Trans-Lux Pictures, as well as handling other important deals in America which Rive will shortly announce.

Gala Film Distributors, Ltd., is the leading distributor of continental European product in the United Kingdom, and the only such company to control its own circuit of theatres throughout the country. Its chain includes three first-run houses in London, the Continentale and the Berkeley, each with 600 seats, and the Cinephone with a seating capacity of 500. In addition, the circuit has key first-run houses in every major city in England.

The company distributes approximately 25 features annually, including 90 per cent of the output of Titanus Films of Italy. It has a long-term tie-up with Pathe Overseas of France, guaranteeing it distribution in the Far East, and with U.F.A. of Germany. A co-director of Gala Films is the South African magnate, William Boxer, whose Empire Films is the largest distributor of foreign product in South Africa with the only circuit of theatres regularly playing such pictures.

Merger Faces Court Test

NEW YORK—It was learned last fortnight that the revived merger plans between List Industries Corporation and Glen Alden Corporation faces possible court intervention.

Judge A. David Benjamin, in Kings County Supreme Court denied the corporation a continuance in a Glen Alden stockholder's suit seeking a permanent injunction against a merger unless they agreed to put over their annual meetings to give him time to rule on the case's merits.

List stockholders are scheduled to meet at the Wellington Hotel here on April 10; and Glen Alden at the Sterling Hotel, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., April 21 to vote on the merger.

Judge Benjamin said he needed time to determine if the new merger plan might be tied in to the old one, which was ruled invalid last year by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

"Imitation" Ad Ban Hit

NEW YORK—The MPAA's Advertising Code Administration last week queried the Pittsburgh Press asking where the advertising on U-I's "Imitation Of Life" was wrong.

The Scripps-Howard newspaper refused to run U-I copy on the film because it dealt with the race problem. No question of morals was concerned.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

WITH THE "Don't take your wife for granted—take her to the pictures" campaign concluded, Associated British Cinemas Jack Goodlatte and Bill Cartledge can congratulate themselves on one of the most imaginative and successful promotions ever within the industry. Not only have British independents adopted the slogan, but queries have poured in from overseas.

TOA's director of public relations A. Floerscheimer showed great interest. Mrs. Lucille E. Price, secretary of the Theatre Owners of North and South Carolina, wrote for full details and offered to buy samples of all advertisements which were, of course, presented without cost. N. A. Taylor of Canada's International Film Distributors has signified his intention of using the campaign in the Dominion, while "down under," Ernest Turnbull of Hoyt's Theatres, Australia, adopted the layouts and notified ABC later, reminding them that "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery."

ABC concluded a deal with J. B. Milne, the Scottish independent, whereby they acquire his new Capitol in Dundee, and he purchases from them the Plaza, Dundee; King's, Montrose; and Playhouse, Galashiels, bringing his total up to 24 halls. ABC are equipping the Capitol with Todd AO and will reopen with "South Pacific."

Can't get away from ABC personnel these days. Flying to Dublin recently, I found myself on the same plane as Jack Foster, the chief architect, Bill Carpenter, and Stanley Winch, who were going over for the opening of a bar and restaurant at the Adelphi. At breakfast in the Shelbourne Hotel, I saw Dr. Eric Fletcher and Jimmy MacDonald, who were attending the board meeting of an associate company. The gossip, incidentally, is that the group may be extending its interests in Ireland. At the air terminal I met Stan Mills, and for a companion on the return flight, I had Bill McNally of the engineering department. ABC gets around.

MIKE FRANKOVICH hosted a Dorchester lunch to introduce Sam Goldwyn's Douglas Netter, who is here to launch "Porgy and Bess," and is looking for a suitable theatre of between 1,200 and 1,500 seats. It is almost sure to be a legit which may need gutting and refashioning. Meanwhile, Mike, the exhibitor, has a proud boast. The Columbia Theatre has not had a single empty seat since it opened. "Gigi" is now heavily booked into the summer. . . . Back to America after a long stay here during which he has made many friends has gone Herman Cohen to confer with his company, American International. He has taken with him prints of "Horrors of the Black Museum" and "The Headless Ghost," which he has produced in conjunction with Nat Cohen (no relation). Herman hopes to return to make a big scale production in the summer. I hope he does. . . . Sorry to hear that RFD's Fred Thomas has been hospitalized for a nasal operation. Here's to a speedy recovery.

AFL Fights "Runaways"

HOLLYWOOD—The Hollywood AFL Film Council last fortnight called upon Congress to "require that all motion pictures and television films made in foreign countries and exhibited in the U.S. be plainly labeled in the main screen title with the country of origin in order that the American public no longer be hoodwinked by American runaway producers."

The Council also urged that the next national AFL-CIO convention vote support of a nation-wide consumer boycott of all pictures made by such producers.

Abe Schneider, right, president, Columbia Pictures, recently welcomed Dick Clark, idol and trend-setter of American teenagers, to the growing list of independent producers affiliated with Columbia. TV personality Clark will make two films for Columbia release.

Albany Exhibs Look At New Fox Setup

ALBANY — Local autonomy for 20th Century-Fox exchange here was generally welcomed by exhibitors on the ground that it would effect quicker decisions in matters concerning them. This was thought true because "deals" would not have to await approval by higher echeloners based in New York City or elsewhere.

Exhibitors also thought that the Albany selling group for Fox would better understand their needs and potentials, because the sales team is "on the ground and in the field." They are held to be intimately acquainted with all situations.

At the same time, Film Rowers believed the changed arrangement might make it "tougher" for the branch manager and his sales crew, because they could not "pass the buck" or contend deals must be "okayed by New York." They are now "on the spot," according to colleagues.

The arrangement is both a challenge and an opportunity for Clayton Pantages, 20th-Fox's Albany manager, the industry holds. He and his assistants have the power to make virtually all decisions, but there will be "a day of reckoning" when possibly unwise or costly actions come up for review.

In all events, the Fox development, which lodges circuit selling within his territory on the branch manager, along with decisions as to advertising moneys allotted and other major matters, will be closely watched here.

"Men In The Street" Against Censorship

COLUMBUS, O.—Three out of four "men on the street" quizzed by Jim Gordon, Columbus Star inquiring reporter, said they are not in favor of a revival of film censorship in Ohio.

Only pro-censorship interviewee was Kenneth Kreider, attorney. Said he: "They should have censorship. The movie industry ought to be smart enough to do it themselves. That's why they aren't doing any business. I just returned from Mexico and there isn't any of the sexy junk found here."

Anti-censorship sentiments were expressed by the following:

Elmer Broedel—"I never saw a movie that I didn't think was all right. I think the controls the moviemakers impose upon themselves are satisfactory. I can't see why the movies would contribute to juvenile delinquency. Parents should control their own kids."

Erwin Carl—"I don't think there are that many movies that need to be censored. The so-called art movies should stay in the art theatres and not be run downtown. This is a modern society, and I don't believe movies contribute to juvenile delinquency."

Lawrence Galloway—"I'm not particularly in favor of it. I don't think juveniles should be permitted to see some shows. It's up to the parents to bring their kids up right instead of blaming the movies for juvenile delinquency."

SEVERE LIMITS

both the F.C.C. and the House Committee that the only body that could grant any authorization for permanent toll-TV, is Congress, and at the present moment, nobody in Congress is ready to exercise that authority. In fact, at the present moment any final decision on broadcast toll-TV is three years off, and it is the Joint Committee's hope that it can instigate the hearings that will plug the loop-hole for cable-TV.

the most spectacular shows anywhere. Included were 185 musicians, 200 voices, and at least another hundred dancers and star performers including such luminaries as Sammy Davis, Jr., George Gobel, Gordon MacRae, Giselle McKenzie, and numerous others.

Ben Goffstein, one of the most active barkers from the host tent, officiated as master of ceremonies and introduced a dais loaded with names. Included were Nevada's Governor Grant Sawyer, U.S. Senator Alan Bible, Congressman Walter Baring, Lt. Governor Rex Bell, Las Vegas Mayor C. D. Baker, and Nevada's Bishop Robert J. Dwyer.

Not unnoticed in the welter of activities was Variety's recognition of the continuing efforts and support of the motion picture trade press, which was underscored in a resolution adopted by unanimous voice of the convention.

"Whereas, the several organizations constituting the trade press of the motion picture, theatrical, amusement and allied industry have, during the past years, enthusiastically cooperated in telling the Variety story in their respective newspapers and journals; and

"Whereas, at this 32nd annual convention of Variety Clubs International, acknowledge-

The Buffalo Evening News in a recent issue on the editorial page under the title of "Censoring the Movies," said, in part, "Agitation to tighten the state's censorship of movies is reflected in a number of bills now before the Legislature. One measure—the most controversial of the group—would require state classification of films as fit for the general public or for 'adults only.' That some movies are not suited for young audiences is apparent to every movie-goer. But this legislation would vest in a few states censors a responsibility of judgment better left to parents. The real question is not whether state film censorship should be extended, but whether its continuance at all serves any public need. New York is one of four states that censor movies; the others are Maryland, Virginia, and Kansas. Twenty cities also censor films. The rest of the nation gets along without such censorship, and we are not aware that morals elsewhere are suffering more than here."

Don Allen to take over as general manager of Tri-States. Woodrow R. Praught will move to Detroit to become general manager of United Detroit Theatres. Both circuits are a part of American Broadcasting-Paramount theatres. Allen now heads the company he has served 33 years, starting out as an usher. Tri-States operates houses in Des Moines, Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, Waterloo, and Davenport, Ia.; Kansas City, Mo.; and Omaha, Hastings, and Grand Island, Neb. . . . The Senate of the Iowa Legislature has passed and sent to the house a bill to allow the country supervisors to license theatres, bowling alleys, and similar amusements located out the city limits. Under the present law, the township trustees license the theatres. The bill is an aftermath of several court cases in situations where the township trustees refused to grant licenses for drive-ins.

DETROIT

"The Five-Poster," monthly magazine published by Tent 5, Variety Club of Detroit, states that what is probably the largest group of Barkers ever to attend an annual convention is en route to Las Vegas. As of press time, 24 had signed on the dotted line. Minus what may be last-minute additions, these 24 Detroit Variety conventioners are currently

It was Yul Brynner week in the city with the star appearing in three pictures, "The Journey" at the Loew's State, "The Sound and the Fury" at the Metropolitan, and "The Ten Commandments" at the Majestic.

JACKSONVILLE

Mark Chartrand, Wometco Theatres executive in Miami, who is serving as the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Florida representative with the Theatre Owners of America, has issued a full and comprehensive report to all MPEOF members on the Feb. 28-Mar. 2 gathering of TOA officials held in Washington. He urged Floridians to strongly oppose any change in the minimum wage law as it affects theatres and to give immediate vocal and financial support to the industry's Joint Committee on Toll-TV. . . . Horace Denning, local Dixie Drive-Ins executive and COMPO exhibitor chairman for Florida, has urged all MPEOF members to cooperate with COMPO in its current campaign for the collection of dues. . . . Retired exhibitor Col. John Crovo booked an excellent talent show into the Hotel Mayflower's roof garden for the 30th annual banquet of the county tax collectors of Florida. . . . T. P. Tidwell, 20th-Fox branch manager, attended a company gathering in New York. . . . WOMPI members have scheduled their annual election for a date in April. . . . Edna Cox is now serving as WOMPI interim first vice-president, replacing Dot Edrington, resigned. . . . The newest WOMPI member is Grace Cobb, French Harvey's secretary at FST. . . . Bob Bowers, Allied Artists branch manager, has moved his entire staff into new quarters at 331 East Bay Street. . . . North Florida drive-ins went through a patronage slump when record-breaking March rains kept many customers away for nearly two weeks. . . . Sara Keller, former WOMPI president who left the industry, is back on Film Row to the delight of many friends, and has become an active WOMPI member again. . . . FST's Bonnie Stroud has joined the growing WOMPI ranks. . . . All local WOMPI members have pledged themselves to penny-a-day savings throughout the year as donations to the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital. . . . As a fine service to the industry, WOMPI members have divided up the local telephone directory and have begun making calls to friends and strangers, asking them to view the Academy Award telecast the night of April 6. . . . Judson Moses, MGM exploiter from Atlanta, was here for promotions on "The Mating Game." . . . Carlton J. Carter, owner of the local Airbase and Ribault drive-ins and the Edray, Macclenny, Fla., also has the Service Concessions Company, a theatre supply business which is currently being enlarged to attract statewide patronage.

MIAMI, FLA. NEWS—The F.C.C. announced that the long-time partnership of Michell Wolfson and Sidney Meyer in Wometco Enterprises, Inc., may soon come to an end. The company has asked the Federal Communications Commission to approve a corporate reshuffling which would take Meyer out of the active management and leave Wolfson in control. The break-up of the 34-year-old Wolfson-Meyer partnership apparently was caused by some basic policy differences. Under the plan filed with the FCC, Meyer—who is Wolfson's brother-in-law—will sell five per cent of his stock to the Wolfson family, retain 10 per cent, and sell the remaining 35 per cent to the public. The arrangement would give Wolfson working control of 55 per cent of Wometco's stock. Meyer would retire as vice-president and become an honorary board chairman, director, and consultant.

MEMPHIS

Strand, Loew's Palace, and Loew's State here are operating under new top management as a result of promotions and realignments in American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and Loew's Theatres, Inc. Kermit Carr, new president of Paramount Gulf, with headquarters in New Orleans, recently spent a week at the Strand and other theatres in the Memphis area. Alex Thompson, Tenarken district manager, and Carr, who was recently named to succeed Henry G. Plitt, toured the Tenarken district. Plitt is now president of

ABC-TV Films in New York, and his successor, Carr, moved up from the presidency of Florida State Theatres, headquartering in Jacksonville. . . . Rosewood became the third neighborhood movie subjected to tear gas attacks in a week in Memphis. Memphian and Idlewild were the other houses to have patrons flee in tears. Memphian was having an invitational trade screening of Universal-International's "Imitation of Life," when tear gas drove guests from the theatre. The doors were opened and the fumes were blown out by the air conditioning system. After a half hour the people re-entered. While movie projectionists have been on strike for about two years at all three theatres, it is believed pranksters were responsible for the incidents. The head of the Moving Pictures Operators Local said the attacks "definitely were not caused by any of our men." Vials found at Rosewood and Idlewild were of the same type. . . . Von, Hernando, Miss., is under the management of J. B. Bell, and Superba, Charleston, Miss., is operating Saturdays only, whereas Raja Drive-In of this town has begun full time operation. Five Memphis area drive-ins have reopened, namely: Bellevue, Frayser, Jaxon, Summer, and Sixty-one. "Some Like It Hot," showing at Loew's Palace, is marked "adults only" at request of Memphis and Shelby County Board of Censors. . . . Strand, Hohenwald, Tenn., closed with the re-opening of Highland Drive-In of this city. Westwood Drive-In, Aberdeen, Miss., re-opened; Mesa Drive-In, Camden, Ark., and Cardinal Drive-In, Mayfield, Ky., reopened. . . . Jackson, Miss., theatre managers say city officials are preventing Jackson theatres from showing some of the top current films. This is because Jackson has a policy against the showing of movies depicting racial integration. "Kings Go Forth" was scheduled to show at the theatre managed by George Pollitz recently, but was canceled at the request of the police chief. Chief W. D. Rayfield said later he asked the manager to cancel because of current race relations, and that the manager complied voluntarily. He claimed there was no threat to close the movie. "I appreciated the cooperation," he added. "Kings Go Forth" played in Memphis last August at Loew's State, and was held over for a second week. No one at the Jackson City Hall will accept responsibility for the censorship, and theatre managers are reluctant to make public statements for fear of being branded traitors to the southern stand against integration. . . . Reopened recently are Pines Drive-In, Pine Bluff, and Skylark Drive-In, Pocahontas, both in Arkansas, and the following in Tennessee: Lake County Drive-In, Wynnburg; Skyview Drive-In, Savannah; and Mid-Way Drive-In, Camden. . . . Howard, Bruceton, Tenn., and State, Henderson, Tenn., have reopened. Wilmot, Wilmot, Ark., is on a week-end only basis. Skylark Drive-In, Newport, Ark., and Monticello Drive-In, Monticello, Ark., are now in full time operation. The summer season has begun for Tommies Drive-In, Kennett, Mo.; Mojac Drive-In, Indianola, Miss.; and Starlite Drive-In, Henderson, Ky. . . . IN MEMORIAM

PAUL O. KLINGLER, veteran showman and theatre exhibitor, died March 7 at his home in Waterbury, Conn., at the age of 52. Death was due to a heart attack. Klinger had been in retirement following a stroke two years ago.

Born in Lewistown, Pa., Klinger entered show business while in his teens as an usher at the Rialto in that city. After operating his own theatre at nearby McVeytown, he returned to the Rialto as general manager, continuing in that position for 15 years, in association with owner Mary Check, now also deceased.

In 1944, Klinger joined Loew's, Inc., as manager of the Strand, Waterbury. After its closing, he served as assistant manager of Loew's Poli in Waterbury until his illness and retirement two years ago.

Klinger was active in exploitation and promotion, as well as the business management phases of exhibition. In Lewistown, he pioneered in the presentation of "name" band and stellar "in person" presentations on the Rialto stage, and was considered one of the area's foremost showmen.

He is survived by his wife Theomyra of Waterbury; his parents, Alfred and Blanche Klinger, and a brother, Harold, all of Lewistown. Burial was at Lewistown March 11.

Plaza was recently acquired from the Long Circuit. . . . F. B. Leathers, Palace, Paducah, Tex., has announced that he may not reopen his Chief Drive-In this season unless this region receives good rains. The Chief was not opened last season because of economic rea-

NOTICE TO THE INDUSTRY

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR has decided that too little attention has been paid to the deaths of industry veterans, who have given entire lives to the operation of this industry's theatres, and to the industry's film distribution system. The tears of a few close friends, and a three-line obit notice in the local and trade press, do not seem to adequately record either a lifetime of effort, or the "mark" that many of them have left on this industry of ours.

THEREFORE: If the relatives and/or associates of deceased veterans, who had 20 or more years of their lives devoted to such industry pursuits, will service us with a recent black-and-white photo, and with a brief biog, we will try to find space in an early issue for its use. Through this method, both their career and their accomplishments will be entered in the industry's recorded history.

ALLIED ARTISTS

The Giant Behemoth (5903)

AA
(Filmed in England)

ESTIMATE: Good science fiction.

CAST: Gene Evans, Andre Morell, John Turner, Leigh Madison, Jack MacGowran, Maurice Kaufman, Henry Vidon, Leonard Sachs. Produced by David Diamond; directed by Eugene Laurie.

STORY: Scientist Gene Evans lectures on the theory that atomic experiments will have an effect on creatures in the water, and when a fisherman on the British coast dies mysteriously, suffering from burns, and thousands of fish are found dead on shore, he fears that his theory has been proven. With aid provided by atomic commission head Andre Morell, they find that there is a prehistoric monster beneath the ocean's waves. In a matter of time, it destroys a large ship and is expected to come up the Thames River, with the city of London threatened. Ordinary explosives don't affect it, and when it takes to the land a panic follows. Evans reasons that the atomic particles in its system will eventually kill the beast, but a way must be found to hasten the progress. They devise a radium head for a torpedo, and Evans, together with a submariner in a two-man sub, launch the weapon successfully in the river, killing the thing. He hears of a similar incident involving dead fish somewhere in America, and it looks as though he's got another job to do.

X-RAY: Very well done is this science fiction thriller from England which has a goodly amount of suspense, excellent special effects, an interesting yarn that holds up well from start to finish, good acting, and commendable direction and production. With a bit of a campaign, better results may be the result. It should do well as part of the show. The screenplay is by Eugene Lourie based on a story by Robert Abel and Allen Adler.

Count Your Blessings (919)

COMEDY DRAMA
102M

MGM
(Metrocolor)
(CinemaScope)

ESTIMATE: Entertaining.

CAST: Deborah Kerr, Rossano Brazzi, Maurice Chevalier, Martin Stephens, Ronald Squire, Mona Washbourne, Patricia Medina, Tom Helmore, Steven Geray, Lumsden Hare. Produced by Karl Tunberg; directed by Jean Negulesco.

STORY: Deborah Kerr and French Captain Rossano Brazzi meet in wartime London when he arrives with a routine message from her fiancé, Tom Helmore. Shortly afterwards, they find themselves in love and they get married. Brazzi's leave is cut short when orders take him out of the country and to different fighting fronts, as well as a prisoner-of-war camp. The time of separation stretches to nine years, and even though a son, Martin Stephens, has been born to Kerr, she is lonely. With the various wars over, they are finally reunited, but their honeymoon is interrupted by the presence of Stephens and the measles. They reside in Paris, and Kerr finds that Brazzi's family is very wealthy. She also learns that Brazzi likes women in the manner of most Frenchmen. She is aided over the rough spots by his uncle, Maurice Chevalier, until she sees Brazzi in what she believes is a compromising position. She takes Stephens to England and starts divorce proceedings. Stephens finds there are advantages to the situation and likes being spoiled when each decides to keep him for a while. Attempts at reconciliations are thwarted by the youngster. Brazzi decides it would be to the best interests of the boy if he remained with Kerr most of the time, whereupon Stephens runs off, not liking this turn of events. When he is found, he is revealed as the culprit who kept them apart and they are reconciled.

X-RAY: Beautifully mounted and finely produced is this romantic comedy drama that is entertainingly attractive. The yarn is light in weight and interesting, while the cast gives a good account of itself. Direction is capable and to the point. The use of Metrocolor brings out the beauty of France and England as seldom seen before, with some of the high spots of each country seen and explained. The film is a neat package that should please most viewers. The screenplay is by Karl Tunberg. Incidentally, Maurice Chevalier is seen here in strictly a dramatic role, minus music or comedy.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Higher program rates or better.

AD LINES: "Fun For All Ages"; "The Oddest Love Affair of the Century."

The World, The Flesh And The Devil (917)

DRAMA
95M

MGM
(CinemaScope)

ESTIMATE: Unusual, highly interesting drama.

CAST: Harry Belafonte, Inger Stevens, Mel Ferrer. Produced by George Englund; directed by Rabald MacDougall.

STORY: Harry Belafonte is a coal miner, who is sent down to investigate a passage that threatens to collapse. He is trapped. Others start to dig him out when activity stops all of a sudden. He digs himself out only to find that during his five days below ground, a nation has set off an atomic poison blast which has seemingly killed off everyone in the world. He heads for New York City and finds it empty of life as well. He settles down in a comfortable apartment, able to use the facilities available. After a time, Inger Stevens, another survivor, makes herself known, and they become fast friends. There is a hint that given enough time, they may become even closer, although the move wouldn't be forthcoming from Belafonte. Via short wave radio, he learns that others may be alive somewhere in Europe. Their situation is changed by the arrival by boat of Mel Ferrer, another survivor, and he makes a play for Stevens, who is confused. When Ferrer sees that Belafonte stands in his way, he goes after him with a gun, but he can't kill him at the showdown. The three are thrown closer together, and the future is still an uncertain thing.

X-RAY: Fascinating and unusual are words that perhaps best describe this tale purporting to show the result of indiscriminate use of weapons of the atomic age. The story is relatively simple, but the way it is photographed and presented is most different, made possible by fine technical work. It starts out on a high note of interest, maintains its pace throughout, and then winds up in a climax calculated to stimulate the imagination. The cast is fine, and the presence of Negro Harry Belafonte among the world's survivors adds another dimension. The direction and production are superior, while the photography is most commendable. The entry can play as part of the show or as something special, depending on the campaign, situation, etc. The screenplay is by Randal MacDougall.

TIP ON BIDDING: Depends on individual situation.

AD LINES: "The Story That Describes Man's End And His Rebirth"; "An Unusual Tale of Suspense and Unique Adventure."

Thunder In The Sun (5817)

WESTERN
81M

Paramount
(Eastman Color)

ESTIMATE: Off-beat entry has angles.

STORY: In 1847, Jeff Chandler has been hired as a guide to get a small wagon train of Basques from the French mountains through to California, where they hope to start a wine industry from the vines they carry with them. Leading them is middle-aged Carl Esmond and his young wife, Susan Hayward, who was betrothed to him as a young girl but who does not love him, although she respects him. Assisting Esmond is his younger brother, Jacques Bergerac, who admires Hayward. Chandler, too, is aroused by Hayward, and she is forced to repulse his advances. One night, Esmond is killed by a nervous sentry. The group is for turning back, but Hayward persuades them to continue on. According to custom, she is betrothed to Bergerac, but Chandler wants her. Their progress brings them to the desert where water is scarce, and still the Basques insist on sharing their water supply with their vines. A prairie fire also adds to the hazards, and Hayward has to be rescued by Chandler when she attempts to save the vines. They find that they really love each other. This is even apparent to Bergerac. Chandler discovers that Indians wait to ambush them in a mountain pass. Though outnumbered, the people are determined to battle the Indians in the manner of fighting in the mountains at home. The women drive the wagons through while the men fight the startled Indians in most unorthodox fashion routing them. The territory of California is close at hand for the survivors.

X-RAY: The prime selling points of this outdoor action yarn are the "names" of Jeff Chandler and Susan Hayward, in addition to the story which is off-beat in subject matter though routine in execution. There is a good battle scene climax in addition to fair performances, adequate direction, and okay production. The use of color provides an assist, and the entry should do okay as part of the program. Russell Rouse did the screenplay, based on a story by Guy Trosper and James Hill.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Better program rates in many situations.

AD LINES: "A Daring And Unusual Fight To The Finish"; "An Off-Beat Adventure Yarn."

WESTERN

20th-Fox

ESTIMATE: Excellent, name-packed entertainment.

STORY: The town of Warlock is terrorized by a gang of cowboys who ride in when they please, shoot the place up, and kill or drive away every deputy named by the citizens. Finally, the desperate citizens call in Henry Fonda, famous gunfighter and freelance marshal to restore order. He is accompanied by gambler Anthony Quinn, his partner, who is extremely protective of Fonda. Quinn's crippled leg has warped his outlook and only Fonda is his friend. Fonda succeeds in cowing the cowboys. Richard Widmark, one of the cowboy mob led by Tom Drake, is repelled by the unnecessary violence and decides to remain in town. He takes the legal job of deputy and determines to uphold the law, even though it means coming up against Fonda, whose extra-legal status is jeopardized. Into town comes Dorothy Malone, once loved by Quinn. She hates Fonda for killing a man she was to marry, a killing actually arranged by Quinn. Fonda falls in love with Dolores Michaels and determines to settle down, much to Quinn's displeasure since he doesn't want their relationship disturbed in any way. Widmark and Malone are attracted to each other. In a showdown gun battle, the townspeople rally to Widmark's side and the cowboys are routed. Fonda is forced into a gunfight with Quinn and kills him. Realizing the days of the gun are numbered and that Warlock is Widmark's town, Fonda rides off.

X-RAY: There are westerns and there are westerns. This one ranks with the best. A wonderful cast loaded with name power and a perceptive screenplay by Robert Alan Arthur combine with Dmytryk's sensitive direction to create a beautiful film with appeal to everyone. There is plenty of action for the western fan who likes his entertainment straight, but there is also considerable care taken to present interesting, complex characters in conflict, and this, too succeeds remarkably. Fonda, Quinn, and Widmark head the star-studded cast and couldn't be improved upon. Interest is gripped early and never permitted to lag, and the two hours plus never seems too long. The exhibitor has the names to bring them in, and the picture to keep them happy, and the result should be a happy boxoffice story for all situations. This is a western in the classic tradition, but with plenty of extras for the more discriminating fan. CinemaScope and DeLuxe Color photography are assets.

TIP ON BIDDING: Better rates.

AD LINES: "Motion Picture Excitement Comes Of Age In A Western Classic With The Perfect Cast"; "Come Sundown, Comes Sudden Death . . . In Warlock."

79M.

Warners

ESTIMATE: Fair programmer.

CAST: Mamie Van Doren, Jeff Richards, Arthur Hunnicutt, Carol Ohmart, Tom Duggan, Tex Williams, Donald Barry, Nacho Galindo, Orlando Rodriguez, Johnny Olen and his group. Produced by Aubrey Schenck. Directed by Howard Koch.

STORY: When rodeo trick rider Mamie Van Doren finds the romantic clutches of Tom Duggan too much to handle, she yells for help which is forthcoming from rodeo rider Jeff Richards. Since she has nowhere to go, Richards okays her going along to more rodeo events. The next one at a fair ground has Richards winning most of the events only to have the promoter abscond with the money. Richards has to rescue Van Doren a number of times as men get ideas that are too friendly, but he never gets any ideas on his own, which irritates her as she is falling in love with him. They finally arrive at the ranch of Nacho Galindo, who has been saving Richards' money so that he can settle down on a ranch of his own. He borrows money to enter a two day rodeo and after a night of fun with Carol Ohmart, can't seem to get started on his events. That night, he has another date with Ohmart which Van Doren interrupts. She shows Richards that he, too, is in love with her. The next day, he wins most of the events, walking off with a large chunk of the prize money. Van Doren tries to make him jealous and has to be rescued again, but this is the last time as marriage is next.

X-RAY: This programmer has Mamie Van Doren in tight shirt and pants, in addition to which she sings and dances, a sight to behold and for every red-blooded male to appreciate. There are also active horses, bulls, and calfs of varying temperaments at rodeos, as well as a good looking youngster named Jeff Richards, who is convincing. The story is slight and with some interest; the acting, direction, and production are average. Some of the tunes heard include "Born Reckless," "Home Type Girl," "Little Long-er," "Separate The Men From The Boys," "Something To Dream About," and "You Loveable You." Richard Landau did the screenplay, based on a story by himself and Aubrey Schenck.

ADDRESS: Des Moines, Iowa

MANAGER: Dick Gray

We recently obtained good results in attracting children to Columbia's "Seventh Voyage Of Sinbad" through the media of two contests directed at them.

First was a radio contest held on station KIOA seven days before opening. This was based on the magic words the genie says over the lamp in the picture: "From the land beyond . . . beyond, From the world past hope and fear, I bid you genie now appear." The magic words were broken down into three parts or three lines. We made up three contest records. All were the same so far as the contest and picture plugs were concerned, however, on the first spot we used just the first part of the magic words on the first day; second part on the second day; and third part on the third day. This lineup was used twice, giving us six days for the contest, with spots run once an hour every hour for 24 hours a day, so we received a great deal of gratis publicity. The first 100 correct entries received a pass to see the film.

Second was a coloring contest held in connection with Super-Value grocery stores in and around the city. Each of the 25 stores put out 1,000 of the coloring heralds, which was a selling piece for the picture as well as a contest entry blank, complete with picture outline for the kids to color. These were 8½ inches x 11 inches. We gave 500 free children's tickets to the winners of this contest, which was held the week before opening.

The Navy Cooperates on "Run Silent, Run Deep"

THEATRE: Majestic

ADDRESS: Owingsville, Ky.

MANAGER: Jim Denton

On "Run Silent, Run Deep", I contacted the petty officer in charge of recruiting at Ashland, Ky., and requested his help in selling the picture. Lest anyone get the idea that it is a difficult matter to get cooperation from the navy—read on.

About three weeks in advance of playdate Chief Christian came down, a distance of over 100 miles, and went with me to the directors of four high school bands in the area. We asked them to appear in a parade the Saturday before the mid-week showing of the picture. Two of the bands had previous commitments; but two agreed.

We then approached the local scoutmaster and he said he would have his troop in the parade. The next step was to get a fire truck and the local police cruiser lined up, which was just a matter of asking.

Paul D. Flowers, Fox, Venice, Cal., one of the winners of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR's 'Showmen-Of-The-Year' contest, while on a recent studio visit showed Jane Wyman and Clifton Webb on the set of 20th-Fox's "Say One For Me", a copy of the publication announcing his award.

I went to a Lexington sign artist and had him make a nine foot submarine with a title and star credits on each side.

The parade started from in front of the local school in the west end of town and proceeded through the main street to the east end and returned to the school.

We then brought the navy's full sized torpedo back to the theatre where it remained on display until the picture ended its engagement. There was a sailor in front of the theatre each night and day of the showing and he would explain the functioning of the torpedo to any interested parties—and there were plenty. The torpedo had an electric motor and was hooked up so it would run.

In addition, I took Chief Christian to the radio station in Mt. Sterling, where he was interviewed by one of the disc jockeys and he got in a couple of good plugs for the picture as well as for the navy. The local paper gave us a front page story on the parade.

The business we did more than paid me back for the effort. The total cost of the promotion was $15 for the cut-out sub, which I can use again by re-lettering.

G. STUNTS-BALLY

NUMBER 51

The Monsters Bally Things Again

THEATRE: RKO Keith's

ADDRESS: Syracuse, N.Y.

MANAGER: S. L. Sorkin

We recently dug up our diary on monster bally, kept in deep freeze since it is written in blood, and went to town on Allied Artists' "House On Haunted Hill."

Our first stunt was to dress an usher in a special monster costume with a mask fabricated locally by a student of the embalming school (so you don't believe it) and arranged for his appearance on WSYR-TV. The background of the television studio was decorated with a 40x60 and stills from the picture.

We took recordings from the film being used in the lobby and had radio station WOLF re-record it with dirge music. The radio station loaned us a record player and loud speaker. The speaker was set above the box office and was controlled by the doorman. The record with Vincent Price's voice was used for a week before the picture opened and during its run.

A special lobby display was built featuring a locally-made coffin, skeleton, black drapery, etc. A grass mat was used to cover the coffin which was placed beside a cut-out tombstone lettered "Here lies the body of Frisby Quill, he went to see 'House On Haunted Hill'." Skeleton bones were spotted all around the display, which was used for a week in the inside lobby as advance and outfront during the engagement.

For a live front we created our own special monster. His mask was quite horrifying and his claw hands were an exact reproduction from a scene in the picture. When not scaring people out front he toured the downtown area and in an eerie voice announced the title of the picture and the theatre and actually did scare a lot of people.

Instead of ordinary window cards we used 100 one-sheets and plastered them all around town.

We also made up special invitations to the 'House On Haunted Hill' and signed them with Vincent Price's name and sent them out to the drama critics, film critics and other newspapers, as well as the commentators on radio and TV stations.

Of course, we plugged the "Emergo" feature of the film and stressed the fact that this amazing new wonder was specially installed for this engagement so that the thrills might fly right into the audience.

Cat Contest for "Bell, Book and Candle"

THEATRE: Downtown
ADDRESS: Mobile, Ala.
MANAGER: Joe D. Lyons

In order to get the most out of our campaign money we had to do some advance planning to get as much free publicity as possible, so we decided to play up the cat angle (Pyewacket) in Columbia's "Bell, Book and Candle."

In addition to our regular newspaper, radio, and TV advertising, we first ran an ad in the special notice column of the want ads, which read: "WANTED. Gentle cat which wishes to become a TV personality. Call manager. Phone number, etc."

This started the ball rolling. We received enough calls the first day to convince us there are 20 times more cat lovers than we suspected. The results were what we had hoped for. Cat lovers were talking and calling each other all over the area.

We selected a silver colored cat for our promotion. The owner was our local movie editor who writes the column, "Mobile Cinema Scopes." Need we say more. It just happened that our columnist, Vivian Cannon, was a great friend of Jackie Richards, who has a TV show known as "Woman's World" on WKRG-TV.

We also selected a pretty majorette, Pat McCrary, to carry the message before camera. The idea of a majorette being that she already had a costume which showed off her beautiful legs. All dressed up we equipped her with a cellophane bag containing a bell, a book and a candle. These she carried in one hand and the cat on her shoulder, as she walked in on Miss Richards during her show as pre-arranged. She was introduced and asked questions about the picture. This plug lasted about five minutes and gave us one of the best free plugs we ever received. This was the day before the picture opened.

R. J. Crabb, manager, Lyric, Wellingborough, England, recently pulled a stunt for "All At Sea" whereby the first three girls arriving in mid-winter at the theatre in swim-suits would obtain a visit to the ABC Studios to meet the stars, etc. They are seen here "helping" chief projectionist Alan Ashton at the theatre.

After having spent only the price of a bell and a candle and promoting the book, we decided to make more use of them. So we contacted John Dixon, who has a show on Channel 10, WALA-TV, our local NBC station. He was glad to have our majorette on his "Dixon On Disc" teenage studio record hop show.

Another unusual incident was that this film opened on Friday, the 13th, just after Mardi Gras, so with thousands of people in town for the parades we came up with the idea of having a pickup truck, mounted with six sheets on either side and a live "Cat Girl" riding on top ringing a bell, follow all the Mardi Gras parades on Mardi Gras Day. Our only cost was for the use of our maintenance man's pickup and renting a cat girl costume. We estimate that at least 100,000 people viewed the float.

Further, one of the Mardi Gras floats carried a replica of a cat with blinking eyes. We managed to secure the "cat" free of charge after the Mardi Gras and mounted it on top of our pickup in place of our cat girl. This stayed on the truck until the opening day of the picture and then we mounted it on a platform in front of the theatre for display with a three-sheet cutout.

We also had a fine display for our Friday 13th opening using such gimmicks as a ladder, broken mirrors, safety pins, both open and closed, black cats, turkeys with bones, horse shoes, etc.

This work, with very little cost above our normal budget, contributed substantially to increased grosses.

Joe D. Lyons, manager, Downtown, Mobile, Ala., recently held a cat contest in honor of Pyewacket in Columbia's "Bell, Book and Candle". The winner is seen appearing with its majorette custodian with Chuck Thompson on WALA-TV.

Baby, It's Cold Outside!

THEATRE: Lyric
ADDRESS: Wellingborough, England
MANAGER: R. J. Crabb

Wonderful cooperation on the part of the studio end of Associated British Picture Corporation resulted in my recently pulling one of my most successful space grabbing stunts, which not only provided immediate publicity for the picture concerned but a nice boost for the theatre at a latter date.

During the week prior to playing the AB Pathe comedy, "Girls At Sea", a tape recorded challenge was issued to the ladies in our audience to arrive for the first performance at the theatre despite the mid-winter weather wearing swim-suits. The first group of three bathing beauties would be guests for a day at the Elstree Studios, watch shooting of new pictures and meet contract stars.

The stunt became the talk of the town before and after the event. Considering the bitterly cold weather this was something to ask the ladies to do, but the lure of the studios proved irresistible. Two teenagers arrived two hours and a half early to claim that free trip, but the third member of their group did not turn up, so another party arriving much later claimed the prize.

By a fortunate coincidence the studio visit coincided with shooting on the follow up picture to "Girls At Sea", "Girls In Arms" and the studio publicity department rushed through pictures of the local girls with the stars and on the set.

A wonderful press resulted from the announcement of the stunt, the execution and the payoff. Needless to say these three breaks had enormous prestige value in emphasizing that the Lyric is an integral cog in the vast ABC with its many interests in show business.

NUMBER 54

Local "Miss Gidget" Contest

THEATRE: Rialto
ADDRESS: Glens Falls, N.Y.
MANAGER: Jack Mitchell

In connection with our recent showing of Columbia's "Gidget", we held a contest to find our own local 'Miss Gidget'. This was open to any school girl in grades 10 through 12, not over five feet in height. She was judged on beauty, poise and personality.

The contest was held on our stage the opening night of the picture and was judged by a panel selected locally.

All girls in the contest were fitted to gowns from the cooperating Fashion Shop and had dinner at the Queensbury Hotel the night of the event. From the hotel they were brought in a parade of small sport cars furnished by Murphy-Parsons to the theatre with motorcycle escort.

A red carpet was used out in front for them to walk across into the theatre, and the radio station broadcast the arrival and an interview with the girls.

The selection of the girls was made at individual schools where details were turned over to the student councils which selected a group of girls and voted for their "Gidget" entry.

The following prizes were lined up by cooperating merchants: a dress; shoes; a set of luggage; a phonograph; and dinner for two at the hotel.

WWSC radio tied in to the promotion and gave it constant plugging as well as furnishing the first prize of a weekend in New York at the Hotel New Yorker for contestant and her mother, with transportation also furnished by one of the airlines.

Each cooperating store had signs in their window.

Interest ran high in the contest with the various high schools all rooting for their favorite to win.

Newspaper and other ad coverage was profuse due to the local interest aroused and the worth-while prizes promoted.

An Adaptable Lobby Display

THEATRE: Gaumont

ADDRESS: Falkirk, Scotland

MANAGER: Anthony W. F. Wall

At the last minute my booking of "The Missouri Traveller" was replaced by a revival of Walt Disney's "Cinderella." For the original film I had asked J. and P. Coats, the famous cotton firm of Paisley, if they could lend me samples of cotton in each stage from raw cotton to the finished article for a lobby display since the growing of cotton is featured in the film.

The material had arrived when I learned of the program change. For a moment, I feared I should have to return it unused; and then I suddenly asked myself 'Surely the transformation from raw cotton to the finished article compares with the transformation of "Cinderella." With a minimum of trouble the display was adapted. My patrons always seem most receptive to this kind of display.

Keeping up the 'Cinderella' theme, a shoe-maker who specializes in small fitting shoes donated a small pair of shoes, which my apprentice projectionist took around the district in search of the Falkirk Cinderella who could wear them. Since no one with small enough feet could be found, they were exchanged for a pair of evening shoes and the stunt was repeated at midnight at the Falkirk Burgh Merchant's Ball. Two claimants were found and the shoes were won by the toss of a coin.

The second feature was "Treasure Island" and among other exploitation items I organized five competitions, a treasure hunt and 14 window displays in all.

DETROIT—President Milton H. London, Allied Theatres of Michigan, Inc., recently cashed in on the fact that a convention of 2,000 women from Wayne, Oakland, and Macomb Counties and local members of the National Council of Catholic Women were in session here.

He arranged to have six large boards installed which advertised 20th-Fox's "Inn Of The Sixth Happiness," Buena Vista's "Tonka," Columbia's "Seventh Voyage Of Sinbad," and Warners' "Up Periscope." The copy stressed the fact that all four pictures were rated A-1 by the Legion of Decency and all could be seen back home soon at their neighborhood houses.

The ladies were also given heralds repeating this message.

The boards evoked great interest, and it was noted the heralds were not thrown away but carefully folded and put into handbags. The heralds also carried the reminder to watch the Oscar Awards on TV on April 6.

tracted to Neagle, but this phase of her life has to wait until Syms can be straightened out. Haigh is pressed for payment of some debts. Neagle refuses to let Syms give him her savings, and he is forced to turn to an elderly aunt, Helen Haye. Syms drives his car there and waits. Haye turns him down and he grabs her handbag, bringing on a fatal heart attack. Frightened, he runs off, but both are shortly picked up by police and charged with manslaughter. The judge, however, is understanding and releases Syms after castigating Neagle for not keeping a closer supervision over her daughter. Mother and daughter are brought closer together, leaving time for Neagle and Wooland to wed.

X-RAY: It seems as though teenagers have similar problems everywhere as they undertake entering the world of grown-ups. Those faced by Sylvia Syms here are interest-holding and well presented. The cast, direction and production are good, and the entry should do okay as part of the program. There are some jazz sequences for atmosphere emphasis, which teen viewers may find of interest. The story and screenplay are by Felicity Douglas.

ESTIMATE: Interesting import.

CAST: Fernandel, Francoise Arnoul, Claude Nollier, Jacques Castelot, Raymond Pellegrin, Sylvie, Rene Genin, Fernand Sardou. Directed by Henri Verneuil, produced by A. D'Aguiar.

STORY: The birthday of provincial doctor Fernandel is celebrated with family and friends in attendance including his mother, Sylvia; his second wife, Claude Nollier; his daughters, etc. He remembers first arriving in town, a widower, with his domineering mother and young daughters, and how he was attracted to Nollier. When they are married, she is not much of an affectionate wife. On a trip out of town, he meets young and attractive Francoise Arnoul, who is on her way to his home town. They are attracted to each other and Arnoul is not above an amorous interlude when he so desires. Their meetings entail all kinds of risks, and Fernandel even hires her as his receptionist. Eventually, she tires of the complex situation, telling him he belongs with his family even though he is prepared to leave with her. Nollier becomes aware of the situation, but she knows it is futile to beg him to remain. He leaves to meet Arnoul but can't go through with it, and he returns home to find the birthday party in progress. During the celebration, he is called to a patient. When he returns, he finds the guests gone and Nollier waiting to become the real wife he has longed for.

X-RAYS Fernandel, the comic, is not to be found in this import; instead, audiences will see a subdued, serious Fernandel beset with emotional problems and entirely believable as a man who seeks love and understanding. The story is basic and interesting and is well told, aided and abetted by good performances and solid direction and production. The film plays well and should receive the approval of attendees of art and specialty spots. The screenplay is by Jacques Compagnes, Jean Manse, and Henri Verneuil, based on the novel, "Act of Passion," by Georges Simenon.

STORY: Jack Fjeldstad is the only survivor of a sabotage mission sent to the Scandinavian coast to disrupt German operations. The Germans attack and only Fjeldstad manages to get away, with the Germans in hot pursuit. He manages to elude them and is occasionally aided by sympathetic inhabitants who risk their lives to give him food, shelter, and assistance. After days in the ice and snow and being wounded in an avalanche, his toes are gangrene-infected. Though he is given shelter, a lack of medical attention forces him to amputate his toes. Several teams of inhabitants in different localities cooperate to get him across the border into Sweden after several near brushes with death. He does recover in a Swedish hospital.

X-RAY: Based on a true story, this import is full of thrills, suspense, and also contains a goodly amount of action as well as drama. The acting of Jack Fjeldstad is thoroughly realistic while the production and direction keeps interest on high amid authentic surroundings. A lack of polish proves helpful in establishing the proper touch of atmosphere. It should do well in the art and specialty spots, and it could even go in some regulation houses as there is a minimum of dialogue, backed by English narration. Arne Skouen did the screenplay based on the book, "We Die Alone," by David Howarth.

The parents do everything possible to keep Harvey and Sears apart, and Harvey is drawn to Simone Signoret, unhappily married Frenchwoman much older than himself, with whom he enters into a violent affair. In this passionate relationship he finds happiness and also an awareness of the necessity of clinging to his own ideals. However, Signoret is driven to suicide when Harvey marries Sears after making her pregnant. Harvey thus "gets to the top" in social and business standings, but at the loss of his self respect.

X-RAY: This picturization of a novel by John Braine can boast brilliant direction by Jack Clayton and superb performances by practically the entire cast, with the leads all wonderful. It is possibly the frankest, most realistic film about love and real people yet. Some of the dialogue may shock and includes quite a bit of fitting profanity. The picture will doubtless arouse censors' ire, but there is no getting around the fact that the production is one of the finest English pictures to date. The settings and production are most interesting, but it is the inspired direction and top-rate performances that make this a brilliant entry for practically any situation. It should prove a cinch attraction for the women.

AD LINES: "Most Daring Film In A Decade"; "An Emotional Drama That Will Shock You With Its Honesty."

Pacific International
(Psychorama)

ESTIMATE: Satisfactory programmer offers intriguing gimmick.

CAST: Gerald Mohr, Liz Renay, Harry Lauter, Stephanie Farnay, Ed Erwin, Robert Clarke, Red Morgan, Lew Markman, Tony Redman, Frank Bellew, William Purdy, Ray Dearholt, Melford Lehrman, Ken Duncan. Produced by William S. Edwards; directed by Harold Daniels.

STORY: Gerald Mohr, broke and bitter, is on the road. He comes across a car containing a body, and forced to escape in a hurry, he takes the car and identification of the murdered man. Police escort him to the City Hall of a nearby community where he is mistaken for a New York policeman hired to clean up the racket-ridden city. Mohr is sworn in as police chief, earning the enmity of second-in-command Harry Lauter, who had expected the job. Mohr frees singer Liz Renay, in jail for vagrancy, and they plan to escape together. Evidence concerning his impersonation mounts, and he realizes he must stay and expose the real killer. The local crime boss is Robert Clarke, and Mohr exposes a connection between him and Renay. She convinces him of her innocence and tells him the name of the killer. The mayor allows him to continue as police chief after his real identity, is disclosed, and Mohr raids all of Clarke's illegal hangouts. Clarke recalls the killer to get Mohr, but the latter is victorious in a climactic gunfight.

X-RAY: This moderately interesting programmer benefits greatly from a new gimmick offering worlds of exploitation possibilities, Psychorama. Words and symbols are flashed on the screen too fast for the eye to see and are supposed to register subliminally on the brain heightening emotional impact of various scenes. There has been much publicity about the controversial subject of subliminal advertising, and supposed dangers to society if it is misused, and all the talk should add to the film's potential. An interesting prologue explains the system to the audience. Cinematically, it shapes up as satisfactory program fare, with a capable job by Mohr, well known to TV fans, and the presence of Liz Renay, who made headlines of a sort recently as a real-life girl friend of some top names in the underworld. Other performances range from adequate to amateurish, but Psychorama is the key to any business.

FROM US TO YOU . . . A SERVICE BONUS . . . AND A CHALLENGE

AS A SEPARATELY BOUND and saveable Part Three of this issue, thoughtful readers in both exhibition and distribution will find a very complete and knowledgeable Survey on SLIDING SCALE as a fair film-pricing formula. While its preparation was an expensive and time-consuming chore, we have a deep conviction that the adoption of such a selling method, particularly in the great mass of runs that follow the 2,500 to 4,000 big-money ones, would simplify selling, would avoid many a lawsuit, and would keep many a theatre "alive" that will otherwise shutter.

Some of our views or opinions, as expressed in this Survey, may not meet with the approval of some particular distribution leader. We agree that they are arbitrable. But let's not condemn the whole theory of "sliding" percentage without careful and thoughtful consideration.

A sincere trade paper challenges men-of-good-will, in every facet of our great industry, to thoroughly read and digest the reasonings advanced in this Survey.

THE RANK EXODUS

THEATREMEN of the U.S.A. can only look with sadness on the shuttering of all RANK FILM DISTRIBUTORS branches, and on the frantic bag packing that signaled the end to a noble experiment. And yet few will concede that the Rank failure can be attributed to anything more or less than an expensive approach to a misunderstood market.

Certainly, there never was a time when U.S. theatres were in greater need of new product sources, or when U.S. theatremen were more willing to experiment with anything that the public would buy. The Rank approach was to establish a nationwide system of branch offices and of sales personnel, with a resultant heavy weekly cost, but obviously leaving no money for advertising its products either in the trade press or in the general press. Given that trade and general advertising, and a sound merchandising plan, it would have been possible to create a trade and public demand that would have gotten theatre sales by phone and by mail order. But no effort was made to create either taste or demand, and little effort was expended to build either industry or public good will toward their pictures. Huge monies were spent on sales, but none on merchandising.

It isn't the first time that such lack of knowledge has been exhibited in this industry of ours, and it won't be the last. But it is just one more sad illustration that here in the U.S.A., both inside and outside the movie industry, it is "want-to-buy" born of merchandising that breeds success, and not just "want-to-sell."

"Want-to-sell" never sold a theatre ticket!

MORE ON "HEADS INSTEAD OF AXES"

WE ARE GRATEFUL to the score or more descriptive notes, and actual copies, that we have received, relating to a current Disney promotional mailing on "DARBY O'GILL". We too recognize the similarity to Miss Carver's commentary ("USING HEADS INSTEAD OF AXES"—editorial of April 1) that was posed by this mailing.

Parcel post special delivery stamps cost 76 cents to carry this mailing from Cincinnati to the east and west coasts, and even 65 cents was necessary when mailed in Cincinnati to local recipients. Each corrugated cardboard container probably cost another 25 cents or more. And the completely useless promotional piece, with its two words of copy, must have cost an additional $1.00.

So, if the Disney lists are no more accurate than those that Miss Carver recounts, about nine copies of this two word foolishness, at a total cost of $18 or more, were directed to the executives of the United Detroit Theatre Circuit, dead or alive. And "only two" could possibly be interested.

When the original editorial was written we had no knowledge of the Disney intentions to so promptly prove our, and Miss Carver's, point. But prove it they did—and in a very dull but expensive way. We won't be too surprised should we learn that this proof is the one salutary result.

THE "Q" FROM PARAMOUNT

SUBSTANTIATING some of the promises made earlier, Paramount's current insert in the trade press lists no less than 27 features that are in various stages of production. Seven are completed and are in the hands of the advertising and sales departments; three are completed but are now being either edited, scored, or dubbed; five are actually before the cameras; and 12 are in the preparation stages. Casts and production techniques are listed for 20, and actual production supervision is listed for 26. Yet, according to statements by Jerry Pickman and Martin Davis: "This is only the first fruit of a vast, all-out production program that is designed to yield blockbuster after blockbuster at a rapid rate, in the months and years ahead."

So, this is Paramount's answer to those who have questioned the sincerity of its plans for the future. Paramount chooses to call it "Quality in Quantity". We prefer to draw attention to the cold totals as "Facts".

From NEW YORK, N. Y.

(Wire) I want to take this opportunity of thanking you on behalf of the MPA Ad-Publicity Directors Committee for your all-out co-operation on behalf of the Academy Awards Telecast. I feel that the impact of this promotional publicity campaign demonstrates beyond doubt the ability of all phases of this industry to get behind a project so important to all of us.

CHARLES SIMONELLI

EDITOR'S NOTE: The largest TV audience in history watched the industry's largest show. It had its weak spots, and it had its strong spots. But, by and large, it must have impressed. And it should rekindle a lot of public interest in this industry's wares. Let's follow it up with a new burst of showmanship and intelligent effort.

From HARRISONBURG, VA.

Our local newspaper, the Harrisonburg Daily News-Record, has an audited circulation of over 16,500, but in the past has given us little if any free space. Recently I had the pleasure of accompanying their new general manager to a regional meeting of Shenandoah Valley, Inc., and he brought up the matter of doing something for us. So I took advantage of this to write him and suggest that they do something editorially on the annual Academy Awards. So the following editorial appeared this morning:

OSCAR AWARDS TONIGHT

Hollywood will be putting its best foot forward tonight as millions of theatre-goers await the annual awards of the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences—of the "Oscars" of popular lingo.

To some observers, tonight's glittering performance will be something of an unpleasant reminder that several years ago they were predicting the quick demise of the motion picture industry. This was in the first days of television and the predictions were plentiful that "home movies" would replace the community theatre.

Such has not been the case. Seldom does one medium of entertainment—or communications, for that matter—completely replace another. Rising box office receipts at motion picture theatres throughout the country show that the public, by and large, does want to get away from home at nights and the community theatre, even with a small price tag on it, has drawing power over a free home television program. It goes without saying that the degree of this drawing power will be determined by Hollywood's willingness—and financial ability—to continue to produce outstanding motion pictures of the caliber which annually claim the Oscars.

Naturally, I have already dropped by to express our appreciation; but I think this may serve as an example to others of what can be done if you handle yourself right.

EDWARD PURCELL, III, Manager
Stanley Warner's Virginia Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Nice job! And you have made a friend too!

From LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.

Please be advised that George G. Hattem, Irving Hattem and Morton Sanders have recently acquired this theatre from the Schoen & Katinsky Corp., and its 600 capacity has been completely refurbished with new seats, new wide screen, flooring and carpeting, air conditioning and complete new decorations.

While operating theatre concession, we also have 12 theatres that we operate between us. Jack Hattem, who is a 30 year pioneer in the industry and currently head film buyer for the Interboro Theatre Circuit, is the father of George and Irving.

The Beacon was closed for over two months for the remodeling work, but it opened recently to S.R.O. business. We gave it wide publicity through a door-to-door campaign and saturated the neighborhood with heralds. In addition, we distributed 6000 passes inviting neighboring residents to come see for themselves that this was a NEW theatre. The reaction has been great!

GEORGE G. HATTEM
Beacon Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Good luck with it! It sounds like a smart job. And thanks for that subscription that accompanied your letter. May you renew it many times in the years ahead.

From FORT MADISON, IOWA

I want to congratulate you on getting my book shop supplies to me in such speedy fashion. Everything is always so neatly wrapped and in such good condition upon arrival. Thank you for this excellent service. You are certainly in business with me when theatrical needs are wanted.

JUSTIN JACOBSMEIER

EDITOR'S NOTE: We try to make it a policy that all orders for Theatre Operating Forms and Systems, when accompanied by payment, are shipped on the same day received.

From VICTORIAVILLE, QUE., CANADA

After being on the job for the past 27 years, I genuinely believe that we have a great business and that we can keep it on the sunny side for a long time to come if we will all just use our heads. Let producers deliver good pictures and people will again learn that "a comfortable, conveniently located movie theatre" is a wonderful place of refuge, and the only place to see a good picture on a large screen and with good sound reproduction, as it should be seen. And with no annoying commercials on pills or depilatories. With few color TV sets for years to come, most movies in color could help a lot. But TV sets in the living rooms won't outmode modern movies in theatres, any more than phonographs and radio sets outmoded live concerts, operas and dance bands.

U. S. ALLAIRE
Victoria Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Judging by those Easter Week grosses you certainly seem to be 100 per cent right.

A VOICE FROM THE SOUTH

We see by the March Bulletin No. 192, of the VIRGINIA MOTION PICTURE THEATRE ASSOCIATION, a prominent paragraph headed: "GETTING SOMETHING OUT OF CONVENTIONS." It reads as follows:

"Those of you present at last summer's Convention at Old Point Comfort will recall that a representative of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR was introduced at our opening business session and spoke about the Theatre Operating Forms and Systems that this trade paper has available for theatre operators. He stressed the point that this service is intended primarily for small situations where the owner must take care of his own records, etc. A drive-in operator who was in attendance, and who had been having lots of trouble keeping his records straight, installed this very inexpensive service. About two weeks ago he told us this was one of the best things he had ever done, and actually thanked us for having encouraged him to attend the Convention. WE HOPE TO SEE ALL OF YOU NEXT JULY 6 to 8 AT THE CHAMBERLIN, OLD POINT COMFORT!"

EDITOR'S NOTE: It is nice to get such recognition from a prominent local theatre owner group. Should other organizations want MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR to have someone in attendance at their annual meeting, and to make a full-scale showing of these Theatre Operating Forms and Systems, just give us as much advance knowledge as possible. We'll try!

The total consolidated income is estimated at $12,554,000 or $7.15 per share and includes $7,987,000 or $4.55 per share of special items income, after provision for income taxes, representing principally profit on disposals of films and investments and after reduction for adjustment of investment in certain affiliated companies.

Embassy Trust Suit Set For Jury Retrial

SAN FRANCISCO—The Embassy Theatre $8,000,000 anti-trust suit against the major Hollywood studios and most of the film distributors, which stretched for six months last year before the late Judge Edward P. Murphy, will be retried shortly this time with a jury.

In spite of vigorous opposition by the battery of defense counsel, U.S. District Court Judge Lloyd Burke granted the motion for a jury trial by Embassy Attorney Robert D. Raven. Defense attorneys had argued vainly that in the first trial Raven was agreeable to a non-jury trial before Judge Murphy, whose sudden death last December came only a few days before he was to have heard the closing oral arguments which would have lasted no more than two days. In Friday's decision, Judge Burke also overruled a defense motion to have the transcript of the evidence heard by Judge Murphy turned over to another judge for reading and subsequent verdict. Raven opposed this motion.

This new development undoubtedly will have a bearing on another unfinished movie monopoly case, the $2,000,000 suit by Samuel Goldwyn against many of the same Embassy defendants and also heard without a jury by the late Judge Murphy. Decision in the Goldwyn case, which preceded the Embassy suit for almost the same length of time, also awaited Judge Murphy's findings at the time of the jurist's death.

Joseph L. Alioto, attorney for Goldwyn, told MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR he is studying the Embassy decision by Judge Burke and will decide shortly whether he will also seek a retrial with a jury.

Both suits commanded great industry attention during drawn-out proceedings, and featured a parade of top industry executives to the witness stand.

In an industry noted for its long legal battles, these two have been regarded as even longer, and the prospect of jury trials for both indicates no solution for quite some time.

ACE Meets On Matters Vital To Film Industry

NEW YORK—S. H. Fabian, chairman, American Congress of Exhibitors announced last fortnight that the executive committee of ACE would meet yesterday (April 14) in the board room of Stanley Warner Corporation to "discuss matters of vital importance to the industry."

Fabian's announcement of the meeting followed on the heels of the disclosure that National Allied's board would meet in special session in Washington on April 18-19, with Allied concern over ACE's lack of action one stated reason for the meeting.

All-Time Trendex High For Academy Awards

NEW YORK—The Academy Awards Presentation on the NBC-TV network April 6 was seen by more people in more homes than any other show ever presented on television in the United States. The authority for this statement is Sydney Eiges, vice-president in charge of press at National Broadcasting Company, based on the research by Trendex. The Trendex rating for the program was 57.8.

This Trendex rating is more than 10 points higher than any Oscar show of the past. The previous Academy Awards high rating was 47.1 in 1955, and last year the program gained a 44.7 audience rating by Trendex.

Four out of five TV sets in the U. S. were said to have been tuned to the show last fortnight. This means that the show was presented in 29 million homes, or that 80 per cent of the people owning television sets were watching the Academy program.

NBC's estimate of the total audience, based on the fact that many children were in bed, reduced their projected estimate to 75,000,000 viewers.

These figures are for television only in the U. S. Many listened to the program on almost 200 stations of the NBC radio network.

Simultaneously, the program was presented on the CBC-TV network and the CBC radio network in Canada. Our new state of Alaska had the radio show live, and will have the TV show later via kine (film).

BBC in Great Britain will present the program on April 26. Other countries throughout the world will see it on TV and hear it on radio in the weeks ahead.

of General Precision Laboratory, Inc., for the development of a high speed intermittent movement in 35mm motion picture theatre projection equipment; and to Fred Ponedel, George Brown, and Conrad Boye, of Warner Brothers special effects department, for the design and fabrication of a new rapid fire Marble gun.

The star-studded show was carried by the combined radio and television facilities of the National Broadcasting Company from RKO Pantages Theatre. The show ran so smoothly and rapidly that it was cut at least 20 minutes short.

The event was enlivened by a false bomb threat which was received at the theatre and quietly checked by police, firemen, and theatre personnel.

Current Releases Set New Boxoffice Marks

NEW YORK—The exceptional public response to the current flow of outstanding Hollywood films was noted last week at the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Association of America, Inc.

What seems most reassuring was that the trend appeared to be based on solid ground. It started before Easter and was accelerated during the holiday season. It appears to be carrying over as more pictures go into general release. The trend also has wide geographical distribution and is not confined to just key cities.

There were gratifying reports from all member companies which is another indication of the broad base. The following are highlights of these reports:

Allied Artists reports that two of the most successful films ever to be released by this company are now doing record business. "The House On Haunted Hill," released in January, appears to be headed for an all-time high for this type of attraction. "Al Capone" has opened in only a few situations and already has broken theatre records for opening day and first-week grosses.

Columbia Pictures' new release, "Gidget," a film about American youngsters, has not only proved to be a major box-office success, but also has proved that the public is interested in new young stars, provided they are showcased in an attractive production.

Universal - International's "Imitation Of Life" is rolling up record U-I business in its initial openings. More than 225 openings have already been set for the month of April and it is predicted that it could top the record domestic gross set by the "Glenn Miller Story," Universal's all-time record holder.

The story at United Artists can be told in four words—"Some Like It Hot." UA reports that this "blockbuster," on the basis of business already done wherever the picture has opened, gives every indication that it will be the all-time top money-maker for this company.

George Stevens' "The Diary Of Anne Frank" in its world premiere engagement in New York and recent Hollywood opening, is doing unprecedented business for 20th-Fox on a "reserved seat" basis. "Compulsion" and "The Sound And The Fury" are also running far ahead of most attractions.

Among the MGM recent releases that are rolling up top figures around the country are "Some Came Running," "Green Mansions," "The Mating Game," and "Gigi."

Warner Bros., with "Auntie Mame" and "Rio Bravo," is releasing back to back two of the biggest box-office hits that the company has released in the past 20 years.

Pictures of powerful box-office strength characterize Paramount's current and forthcoming release schedules. At present, "Tempest" and "The Black Orchid" are garnering big grosses.

Haight Quits NTA Post

NEW YORK—The resignation of Eric H. Haight as vice-president and treasurer of National Telefilm Associates, Inc., was announced at the first board meeting held since control of National Telefilm Associates was acquired by National Theatres, Inc.

Reade Reveals Plan To "Co-Finance" Films

HOLLYWOOD—Walter Reade, Jr., chairman of the board, Continental Distributing, Inc., last fortnight revealed a plan for extending to Hollywood producers the benefits of "co-financing" deals now being made with European film-makers.

Reade, who is discussing projects with various producers here, said, "The shortage of motion picture product which has anguished exhibitors and is reflected in current production schedules, could be alleviated to a great extent by quality films which are produced at costs under $1,000,000 and have an expected domestic gross of no more than $2,000,000. Such pictures are not nearly so restricted in play dates as so-called blockbusters."

Under Reade's plan, his company would supply a portion of the financing for films by American producers with the producer to supply the remainder. He believes that direct financial participation by the producers provides an extra incentive and allows the producers more freedom.

Continental distributes about 12 European-made films annually. Among its current releases are the French-made "My Uncle," Academy Award winner this year as the best foreign language film, and "Room At The Top," English made drama, which was judged England's best film of the year.

In its deals with foreign producers, Continental's financial participation has averaged 25 per cent, and participation in the creative aspects has been limited to suggestions concerning the building of "international appeal" for the film.

Reade predicted that within three years the majority of foreign films shown in the U. S. would have English-language sound tracks and that the origin of films would no longer constitute a problem for American exhibitors.

In New York, Carl Peppercorn, Continental vice-president and general sales manager, announced that Sheldon Tromberg and Stanton H. Davis have been appointed district sales representatives for the company.

Tromberg, formerly with Republic and Rank, will handle the Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Cleveland exchanges; and Davis, formerly with RKO and Rank, will handle Boston, New Haven, Albany, and Buffalo.

AB-PT Mulls Boxoffice Aids

NEW YORK—Edward L. Hyman, vice-president, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres disclosed last week that the circuit had issued a call to its northern affiliates to assemble at the Concord Hotel, Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., on May 25-26 to lay the groundwork for a large-scale united exhibitor effort of national scope to realize "the hope of stemming the drop in attendance."

Hyman said that all activity will be directed at improving business for the fourth quarter of the year. He explained that the decision to undertake the effort months in advance of the start of the final quarter was motivated by a desire to give theatres the greatest amount of time possible to create a strong "want-to-see" for the product scheduled for release during those months.

What comes out of the meeting will be assembled in a manual which will go to all persons in the industry who are interested in an orderly distribution of product throughout the year, Hyman said.

Convention Of U.S. Film Councils Honors Industry Notables In Phila.

PHILADELPHIA—The fifth annual conference of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils, Inc., was held last fortnight at the Warwick Hotel with delegates from some 60 councils as far west as Seattle in attendance.

Mrs. Arthur Goldsmith is president of Philadelphia Motion Picture Preview Group, the Hostess Council. The chairman of the Conference is Mrs. Henry Simmons of the Philadelphia Council.

During the two-day session, the Conference screened United Artists' "A Hole In The Head" and U-I's "Imitation Of Life" at the Arcadia; attended a special showing of Cinerama's "South Seas Adventure" at the SW Boyd; and visited the turn-of-the-century nickelodeon at the Franklin Institute.

William Goldman, president, William Goldman Theatres, Inc., received a special citation from the Federation.

Notable among industry representatives addressing various meetings of the conference were Frank Capra, producer and director of "A Hole In The Head"; Silas F. Seadler, director of advertising of Loew's, Inc., who discussed "CinemaScope, Technicolor and Women"; Gordon S. White, Motion Picture Association of America director of Advertising Code Administration; and Taylor M. Mills, director of public relations for MPAA.

The Federation presented a tribute to the late Arthur H. DeBra, former director of MPAA exhibitor and community relations department, who was instrumental in the organization of the Federation.

Honorary awards were presented to Samuel Goldwyn and accepted by James A. Mulvey, vice-president, Goldwyn Productions; to Fannie Hurst, who accepted in person; and Frank Capra.

Goldwyn's citation was for "pioneer, showman, philanthropist, a maker of significant movies, a force in our times—a man whose courage in the face of adversity, whose personal integrity, whose faithfulness to the ultimate in the art of the motion picture production has enriched the lives of us all."

In his acceptance speech, read in his absence by Mulvey, Goldwyn said that his new film, "Porgy and Bess," would usher in "a new era in motion pictures." He also touched upon two of his favorite topics—good taste and censorship, telling his audience, "I have no use for those who go in for sensationalism or sex or catch-penny devices in the hope of luring the public to the boxoffice. Moreover, any producer who starts out with only the thought in mind of making a boxoffice success is usually foredoomed to failure. No producer is smarter than the public. What the producer must do is make a picture that he believes in—that he thinks will provide good entertainment—that pleases him. It is a good feeling to look back and to know I have never made a picture I was ashamed of—and to know that in 'Porgy and Bess' I have once again put on the screen a picture made with the same standards of taste that I have sought to exercise over all the years."

The Federation's annual awards went to Spencer Tracy as "best actor of 1958" for his performance in Warners' "The Old Man and The Sea," accepted by William G. Mansell, branch manager, Warner Brothers Pictures; "best motion picture," 20th-Fox's "The Inn Of The Sixth Happiness"; best actress, Ingrid Bergman for her performance therein; and Mark Robson as best director for his direction of this film. All three of these awards were accepted by Alex Harrison, general sales manager, 20th-Fox.

Mrs. Arretus F. Burt, president, St. Louis Council, said, "We stand united for a screen that will inspire the juvenile world with ideals; that will keep secure democracy in all fields of American life—thus laying the foundation for an abiding faith in our American way of living; for motion pictures that are richly informative in content and truly representative of the life and culture of all nations."

Margaret G. Twyman, director of MPAA community relations department, gave the keynote address.

The officers of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils are Mrs. Dean Gray Edwards, president, Motion Picture Council of Queens; Mrs. W. Lashley Nelson, Jr., first vice-president, Film Council of Delaware County; Mrs. R. H. Sass, second vice-president, Sheboygan Better Films Council; Mrs. William G. Sullivan, recording secretary, Greater Cleveland Motion Picture Council; and Mrs. Philip A. Ley, treasurer, Motion Picture Council of Greater Youngstown.

James A. Mulvey, vice-president, Goldwyn Productions, recently accepted an honorary award presented to Sam Goldwyn at the fifth annual conference of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils, Inc., at the Warwick Hotel, Philadelphia. Mulvey also delivered a speech on behalf of Goldwyn, unable to attend due to pressure of business on the west coast.

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecoff

AFTER SPENDING the better part of a morning at a press conference with William Perlberg, we are convinced that he doesn't much care for exhibitors.

Perlberg, partner in Perlberg-Seaton Productions, is a strong advocate of toll-TV, and he was burning because exhibitors and the free TV industry were protesting the testing of toll-TV, which he claimed was "denying the public a freedom of choice."

Toll-TV would not mean the end of free TV, in his opinion, and it would turn out great for the producers. He was surprised at the unholy alliance of exhibitors and free TV, especially since exhibitors fought tooth and nail to keep features away from TV. Besides, reasoned he, wouldn't it be better for theatres to compete against toll-TV where the public would have to pay, rather than against free entertainment. He thought that theatremen should join the movement and obtain toll-TV franchises wherever possible.

Perlberg lashed out at a request from exhibition for more pictures to be made, stating "more pictures mean more catastrophies." The increase would also not mean that there would be more hits because the percentage of successes would still remain the same. He estimated 75 per cent of the pictures made today were losing money. He would like to see exhibitors offer a guarantee against loss to the producers, and then they would see a flood of pictures.

Phooey to new faces, implied he, asking, "Did you ever try to sell an exhibitor a picture with new faces or unknowns? You get very little in the way of playing time or favorable terms."

Picture making has been reduced to 150 features per year as compared to the 300 to 400 that were turned out annually. Exhibitors, said he, started this trend by going to the government for relief. Now these same exhibitors would like nothing better than to return to block booking. He thought the trend would be towards even less pictures, and he subscribed to Sam Goldwyn's statement that only a hundred pictures should be turned out annually. Even of this number, only five or six turn out to be real blockbusters, said Perlberg in defense of his position.

He further opined that a lot of theatres should go out of business if they are run down and are just "shooting galleries." It's about time exhibitors spent a little money and improved their theatres. They should make it inviting to come to theatres and not challenge the public to show up and then have to put up with poor parking facilities and inferior maintenance and staff operation.

He also found fault with the admission prices charged by exhibitors, claiming that these are "way out of line" except for the real blockbuster or the reserved seat attraction. He saw no reason why theatres shouldn't charge lesser admissions on the slower days and nights of the week. Those who live on a budget might go for this and it should be tried. Said he, "To recapture mass audiences you have to get down to a mass audience price."

Getting back to toll-TV, Perlberg denied reports that past experiments have failed, holding Bartlesville was not a true indication of the operation. Palm Springs, in which he participated via an installation in his home, he deemed successful. The latter was discontinued because of a possible law suit and a shortage of product.

Perlberg's contract with Paramount calls for the release of 10 pictures, and he has just completed his fifth, "But Not For Me," which may be released this fall. Upcoming are "The Rat Race," which rolls in September with Tony Curtis and Debbie Reynolds; a film version of the play, "The Pleasure of His Company," which he bought for $350,000 and which will go in 1960; also, "The Counterfeit Traitor," a spy story which will be filmed mostly abroad in 1960.

Hummel Leaves Warners Int.

NEW YORK — Joseph S. Hummel, vice-president and Continental manager for Warner Bros. Pictures International Corp., has decided to leave the company because of ill health, it was announced last week by Wolfe Cohen, president of Warner Bros. International.

Arthur Abeles, managing director of the Warner Bros. interests in the United Kingdom, will succeed Hummel in directing Warner operations in Europe and Africa, and also will retain his present post in the United Kingdom, Cohen announced.

Lodge To Induct Schwalberg

NEW YORK—Alfred W. Schwalberg, founder and first president of Cinema Lodge B'nai B'rith, will be inducted as incoming president at a luncheon to be held April 17 in the Hotel Astor, it is announced by Jack H. Levin, chairman of the Presidents' Luncheon committee. Joseph B. Rosen will be honored as retiring president of the organization.

Harry Brandt will officiate at the installation.

N. Y. Smoking Crackdown

NEW YORK—Fire Commissioner Edward F. Cavanagh, Jr., last week announced a new plan for flying squads of plainclothes firemen who will hand out summonses to persons found smoking in illegal places in the city's 500 theatres after June 1.

He made known his plan after a conference with representatives of theatre owners. Violators caught by firemen would be liable for fines up to $500 or six months in jail.

The new squad would visit theatres on a shifting spot-check basis, and is expected to end the present system whereby the Fire Department now assigns uniformed firemen to legitimate theatres during playgoing hours.

Anti-Trust Suits Settled

BOSTON—Two anti-trust suits were settled out of court here last fortnight.

The clearance suits had been filed in the U.S. District Court, Concord, N.H., by Miriam Z. LeWitt, Strand, Plainville, Conn., and B. S. LeWitt and Margaret L. Glacklin, Arch Street, New Britain, Conn.

Kerasotes Favors Saturation Advertising

NEW YORK—20th-Fox's decision giving branch managers the authority to direct the advertising and publicity campaign for pictures in their areas as part of their new sales autonomy, was hailed by George G. Kerasotes, president of Theatre Owners of America, as another step towards encouraging area saturation openings accompanied by area saturation advertising campaigns.

Reiterating his belief that area advertising campaigns accompanying regional openings are the most promising merchandising development in the industry in years, Kerasotes declared that such ad campaigns, conducted at the local level, are the only effective replacement for the present emasculated national advertising efforts of the film companies.

"Area ad campaigns and area openings have worked, and will continue to work," Kerasotes said. "I have just returned from the Missouri-Illinois and Heart of America convention in Kansas City, where it was reported Warner Bros' five-state three-exchange area opening of 'The Hanging Tree' increased business 170 per cent over normal in Kansas City alone. Local exhibitor advertising executives and Warner ad men got together and mapped out an ad campaign aimed specifically for the five-state market. Results were so extraordinary that Warners is now readying another picture for similar handling, and is increasing the number of prints to be made available for this second film."

"I have written to all the major film companies, urging them to adopt area openings on an organized basis, so that every month there would be such kickoffs in some exchange areas, and that over the course of the year every exchange area would be covered by several such openings. Every film company has agreed the suggestion is sound, most said they are using area openings to some degree, but all stated they did not believe it would be possible to put the openings on an organized basis, with the film companies co-operating to decide what areas they would cover each month and thus avoid direct duplication."

"If a cooperative effort is impossible at the present, I urge the film companies to act independently—but to try area openings with advertising aimed at that specific area."

"Twentieth Century-Fox's branch managers, armed with what Spyros P. Skouras, their president, says is 'complete local autonomy' not only over film sales but advertising in their area, are in a unique position to test such openings. They have Warners' experience as a guide. I hope they will make the attempt. I know they will find exhibitors not only eager to cooperate, but willing to share the additional advertising expenses with them to effectively blanket their locale and earn the extra boxoffice revenue in which both exhibition and distribution will share. The two—the film company and the exhibitor—working together to make the opening a big exciting public event, can achieve a team work that must benefit both. They, more than anyone else on a national level, are in the prime position to determine how to best sell the product to get the most revenue from their area."

This latest view of the possibilities of 20th-Fox's new setup illustrates the widespread exhibitor interest in the "local autonomy" company policy.

It would appear that Fox has taken a significant step.

PHILIP SUGARMAN, 67, a motion picture projectionist in Rhode Island for more than 55 years, died recently in Miriam Hospital, Providence, R. I. His career in the projectionist's booth matched the development of movies from the hand-cranked one-reelers of the early 1900's to today's feature-length films with wide screens and multiple sound tracks.

He began with the old Keith on Westminster Street shortly after he finished school and from there went to a nickleodeon on the site of the present Albee. Later he worked in Woonsocket at Lynch's and the Opera House—now the Park—and then returned to Providence, where, since 1926 he has been chief-projectionist for C & F Theatres Company working for many years at Fays and since 1953 at the Majestic, now a Stanley Warner house.

NOTICE TO THE INDUSTRY

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR has decided that too little attention has been paid to the deaths of industry veterans, who have given entire lives to the operation of this industry's theatres, and to the industry's film distribution system. The tears of a few close friends, and a three-line obit notice in the local and trade press, do not seem to adequately record either a lifetime of effort, or the "mark" that many of them have left on this industry of ours.

THEREFORE: If the relatives and/or associates of deceased veterans, who had 20 or more years of their lives devoted to such industry pursuits, will service us with a recent black-and-white photo, and with a brief biog, we will try to find space in an early issue for its use. Through this method, both their career and their accomplishments will be entered in the industry's recorded history.

Four NT Officers Named To NTA Board

LOS ANGELES—B. Gerald Cantor and John B. Bertero, chairman of the board and president respectively, of National Theatres, Inc., last week were named to the board of directors of National Telefilm Associates, Inc., a recently acquired National Theatres subsidiary.

Charles L. Glett and Jack M. Ostrow, National Theatres directors, also were named to the NTA board, at a special meeting here following formal completion of the acquisition.

Ely A. Landau is chairman of the NTA board. Other directors are Oliver A. Unger, NTA president, and Harold Goldman, executive vice-president.

National Theatres acquired NTA in an exchange offer, of debentures and warrants for NTA shares and warrants. The offer, declared effective on March 24, was accepted by holders of more than 80 per cent of the NTA shares outstanding, and holders of more than 60 per cent of the outstanding warrants.

Cantor has been a director of National Theatres since February, 1957. He is president of Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co., Inc., investment bankers. Bertero took office as National Theatres president and chief executive officer in October, 1958, and has served on the company's board since 1952. Glett became a vice-president and director of National Theatres in September, 1958. Ostrow has been a director of National Theatres since February 1958. He is an attorney and certified public accountant.

NTA, one of the country's largest distributors of films for television, has a library of approximately 565 feature length motion pictures originally produced for cinema distribution. The company also distributes film series and short subjects.

Long Memphis Strike Ends

MEMPHIS—A projectionists strike of 26 months duration ended last fortnight with the withdrawal of pickets from 15 neighborhood theatres.

The settlement was said to call for a complicated pay schedule with different provisions for the more prosperous and less prosperous theatres. Compromises were made on both sides.

DST Mulled For Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—The Illinois State Legislature last fortnight passed a bill to establish state-wide Daylight Saving Time from the last Sunday in April to the last Sunday in October. If approved by the Senate and signed by the Governor, DST would become effective in Illinois in 1960.

MPAA Nixes Business Building Plan On Piecemeal Basis, Montague Says

NEW YORK — It was made clear last fortnight by the MPAA board of directors that it wants the $2,300,000 full-scale nationwide Business Building campaign or nothing at all.

Abe Montague, vice-president, Columbia Pictures, and the association's representative on the Business Building Campaign's executive committee, reported to the board on the recommendations of the MPAA advertising and publicity committee concerning the campaign. These were that the MPAA committee felt that no piecemeal campaign would do the job, and that the distributors still stand behind the original campaign proposal.

This dooms the proposal of TOA's Ernest G. Stellings that the Business Building campaign proceed with a single project—"Operation Moviegoing"—which would enlist the nation's disc jockeys and cost $300,000, half of which would come from exhibition and the other half from the MPAA.

For the entire campaign, exhibition has pledged $325,000 against its $1,150,000 quota, with an estimated $170,000 actually collected.

WB Sets Dividend

NEW YORK—The board of directors of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., at a special meeting last week, declared a dividend of 30 cents per share on the company's common stock, payable May 5 to stockholders of record April 20.

Baltimore Censor Bill Killed By Committee

ANNAPOLIS, MD.—The Judiciary Committee of the House of Delegates last fortnight turned down a bill which would have empowered the Maryland Board of Motion Picture Censors to declare certain films unfit for children in Baltimore City.

Another measure which would make it a misdemeanor to show "obscene" films in Maryland and imposes a $25 fine for such showings is before Governor Tawes for his signature. This bill, however, is considered little more than a duplication of Maryland law already in existence.

Warners Sets "Cavalcade"

NEW YORK—Warner Bros. will hold a "California Cavalcade" that will bring division and branch managers to Hollywood for the week of June 15-21 from the company's 38 exchanges in the United States and Canada, as well as from various foreign branches.

The week's activities will combine sales campaign meetings on forthcoming Warner Bros. releases with a celebration of the just-concluded record-breaking "Welcome Back, Jack" sales drive in honor of president Jack L. Warner.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

IT'S LUCKY I'm not a nervous type or too much of a drinking man! Returning home the other night there was a cryptic note on the stairs: "There's a lobster in the fridge. A boy scout brought it." Immediately I had thoughts of lobster salad instead of the frugal meal I'd planned.

Hurrying to the fridge I heard a clatter. I opened the door and there was the largest lobster I ever saw—alive.

We eyed each other with certain forebodings. Then I observed he had a label around his neck. It read: "My name's Sam . . . I co-star with Doris Day, Jack Lemmon, Ernie Kovacs in a wonderful new comedy, 'It Happened to Jane.' We arrive at the Odeon on April 30." Stars may have snapped at me before, but never have I really considered eating one, save perhaps Marilyn Monroe in my younger days.

We became rather friendly, but the problem was the utensil in which to cook him. The saucepans were much too small. The washing up basin, he felt, undignified, so we settled for the bread bin. My colleagues, judging by the stories which somehow recalled those of the blitz and the bombs that missed the night before, had had equally exciting adventures, and Columbia got quite a spot of publicity.

ILLNESS PREVENTED Joe Vegoda supporting his partner Michael Green when Regal Films held their office warming in Soho Square. Heading their program of new product and reissues is "Jack the Ripper," which is being presented as a horror gimmick picture. Good luck. Meanwhile there are more than whispers to the effect that other distribution companies are in the course of being set up. They will mainly be concerned with the production of British films and leave most of the selling and physical handling to established distributors.

The British Film Producers Association have unanimously agreed that membership should be open to all makers of British quota films who are resident in the U.K. This will not, however, require an alteration to the constitution.

NEVER ONE to be too depressed with the industry, Jack X. Prendergast is purring at the success of his son in the musical world. As John Barry, he has become a big hit on TV. His show is being produced by another exhibitor's son, Southan Morris' Stewart. . . . U-I's Douglas Granville hosted a fork lunch for the press to meet the delectable Susan Kohner, who answers to the nickname of "Smokey," after the Odeon press show of "Imitation of Life". . . . Nice to renew acquaintances with Jack Lemmon in Les Ambassadeurs Club one recent midnight—this club attracts most of filmland's brightest sparks. . . . Sam Spiegel has arrived to do the ground work on "Suddenly, Last Summer," for Columbia release. . . . What enormous imagination catches the Oscars are! Contents bills for all London's evening papers read: "Hollywood Academy Awards". Oscar must be worth millions to the industry, and he should be protected as such.

Fox Settles With Publicists

NEW YORK—Negotiations between the Screen Publicists Guild and 20th Century-Fox ended last fortnight with the ratification by the SPG membership of an agreement providing for a six per cent across-the-board wage increase for seniors making their minimum $155.

With the ratifying of the agreement 20th-Fox became the first company to settle with the Guild under the terms of the wage-reopening clause in the current contract. Warners, Columbia and U-I are still in negotiation with the Guild.

Scranton To Reorganize

SCRANTON, PA.—Scranton Corporation, former subsidiary of F. L. Jacobs Company, last fortnight received permission to reorganize under the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Petitions granted by U.S. District Judge John W. Murphy here, included the Scranton subsidiary, Hal Roach Studios, Inc. President James B. Johnson, Scranton Corporation, said the action was an attempt to straighten out financial matters.

Araki Joins AA in Japan

NEW YORK—Itsuo Araki has been appointed general sales manager of Allied Artists of Japan, Inc., Norton V. Ritchey, president of Allied Artists International Corp., announced last week. The announcement of Araki's appointment was made simultaneously in Japan by William Osborne, Allied Artists supervisor for the Middle East, Far East and Africa, and Fernando Rodriguez, managing director of Allied Artists of Japan, Inc.

Successful '59 Seen By Republic's Yates

NEW YORK—Douglas T. Yates, vice-president, Republic Pictures Corporation, told company stockholders last fortnight that "1959 should be a very successful year." He conducted the meeting at the Essex House in the absence of his father, Herbert J. Yates, president, confined to his California home with torn leg ligaments.

Earnings in the second quarter ending this month should equal or exceed those in the second quarter of 1958, Yates said.

Gross earnings in the second quarter of 1958 were $400,000, or about $200,000 after taxes. Similar earnings equal to about five cents a share on the 2,004,190 shares of common stock outstanding, were reported for the first quarter of 1959. That compared with earnings of 41 cents a share, including non-recurring profits, in the first quarter of 1958.

Four directors were elected to the board for three-year terms. They were Victor M. Carter, Harry C. Mills, J. J. O'Connell, and Theodore R. Black.

Reporting on the future of Republic, which is no longer in the production of motion pictures for theatres, vice-president Yates said that all facets of the company were expected to continue operating profitably.

TOA Lists Foreign Pix

NEW YORK—The sixth edition of its Foreign Film Directory, listing 759 features from 65 distributors, was issued last week to its members by the Theatre Owners of America.

In a foreword TOA pointed out that the 759 features represent a gross gain of 132 pictures over the October 1958 edition of the semi-annual publication. Since the last edition, which listed 672 titles, 45 films were withdrawn from theatrical release. The new book also lists 65 distributors, two more than the October issue. Ring Film Corporation, NTA Films, and Vinod International were added for the first time, and Stratford Pictures withdrew from the foreign film field, TOA said. It also noted the transfer of Rank Film Distributors of America product to the Lopert Film organization.

The 46-page brochure alphabetically lists films in current release; then shows each company's product by title, running time, cast, type, color, country of origin, whether it is titled or dubbed, and year of release. An appendix lists all distributing companies, and all sub-distributors by exchange area.

Disney, BV Rejoin MPAA

NEW YORK — The MPAA, which during the past year lost two members, Republic and RKO, last fortnight regained the Disney organization which had resigned over four years ago.

Walt Disney Production reaffiliated as a producer member and Buena Vista as a distributor member as of April 1.

The MPAA board reelected all officers following the annual association membership meeting, and passed unanimously a resolution honoring the late Cecil B. DeMille, who was a director of the association for 26 years.

Weiner Heads PR Firm

NEW YORK—Sanford W. Weiner, vice-president and general sales manager of the company, was elected president of Film Representations, Inc., at the last board meeting. He replaced Harold J. Salemsen, who has resigned from Film Representations, Inc.

The letter is composed of several rectangular blocks joined together, giving it a blocky, geometric appearance. The texture of the material is visible, showing a grain or a rough surface. The letter is positioned diagonally across the frame, with its top-left corner pointing towards the upper left and its bottom-right corner pointing towards the lower right. The lighting is soft, creating subtle shadows that emphasize the three-dimensional nature of the letter.

LAYING IT

On The Line

A Date To Remember

The recent activity of the Motion Picture Research Council's Theatre Liaison Staff has established, through surveys and subsequent reports, what many observers both in and out of the industry have long suspected: that the quality of film presentation in far too many theatres, conventional and drive-in alike, is sub-par. This is one way of stating politely that the public is not getting what it is paying for—and has a right to expect—inasmuch as inferior projection can be corrected easily or prevented altogether.

The contents of the MPRC's two projection reports, based on conditions found in many hundreds of theatres in different localities across the country, are not cheerful reading. They are a clue to much that has gone wrong at the boxoffice in recent years, and reading between the lines one suspects inefficiency, even indifference, on the part of projectionists, or local management, or both, in providing the best projection possible with the equipment at hand or available. For instance, in 74 per cent of the big city, first run theatres visited in 1958, MPRC reported that optimum focus could not be obtained!

This deplorable state of affairs may be remedied by action from at least one organization. Theatre Owners of America has called a meeting for today (April 15) to explore the possibility of establishing an industry committee to promote better projection. It has been proposed that such a group should be organized on a non-commercial, non-profit basis to make projection training available to any theatreman who wants it. This, indeed, could be a crucial date in the recovery of motion picture exhibition.

As representatives of leading manufacturers, dealers, service concerns, and others meet with TOA, we congratulate them on their laudable, desperately important objective. At last, a positive prescription for the theatre's economic health is being examined. Much can be forgiven a theatre that succeeds in putting the best picture possible, in the circumstances, on its screen. Although comfort and other facilities cannot long be neglected, it is what he sees on the screen that counts first with the customer; every time he is absorbed by screen fare—which he should be when projection is optimum—then another battle with home TV has been won. Too many of those battles have been lost, we suspect, because theatre projection has not been substantially, or noticeably, superior.

There cannot be any excuse for less than optimum projection. Manufacturers and theatre owners are showing a willingness to cooperate, and equipment is available which, without question, can do the job the industry demands of it in the competitive struggle. Assuming agreement is reached at today's meeting, it remains to formulate and implement a program at the grass roots level. When that is done successfully, and its rewards are being reaped, then, indeed, this would be A Date To Remember.

Luminescent Light for Theatres

By A. STROBL
President, Stroblite Company

Theatre Uses

As a safety measure against electric power interruption, the exit signs made with phosphorescent materials will remain visible in the dark, rendering valuable service in such emergencies.

The early phosphorescent color effects as presented on the stage had great eye appeal to the audience, and there was a growing demand for a method to obtain similar glowing effects without the existing limitations. This led the Stroblite Company in the late twenties to the development of fluorescent color materials and the use of ultra-violet lighting.

In fluorescence, the colors are made to glow by illuminating them with ultra-violet blacklight. The light energy is not stored up, but the colors will glow only as long as the blacklight is trained on them. When this light is shut off—they instantly cease to glow.

Greater Flexibility

Fluorescence has found much wider applications in the theatre because of its greater flexibility. Good effects are obtained even in dimly lit surroundings. The brightness of the

IN 1921, Ziegfeld amazed Broadway with a sensational stage effect. Girls were dressed in regular lace costumes, when suddenly the lights went out and in the blackout the previously colorless costumes burst forth in brilliantly glowing colors. This was the beginning in this country of the use of a new medium—luminescent colors—for producing those beautiful luminous color and lighting effects you see time and again in many leading theatres. It also paved the way for a new industry, and today we find many applications of the once laboratory curiosities; phosphorescence and fluorescence, known as luminescence.

Ziegfeld obtained his effect by painting the costumes with phosphorescent paints. Phosphorescent materials have the quality of absorbing light and then emitting it again. They do not generate light but have to be charged with it, a process similar to charging a storage battery with electricity. When a phosphorescent surface is exposed to strong white light for only a fraction of a minute, it will become fully charged. The stored up light energy will then be given out in the dark, thus producing a glow.

Basic Materials

The basic materials are phosphorescent pigments, which are white or slightly colored in white light but will glow in various colors in the dark. The length of time and the brightness of the glow varies in different materials. The after-glow may be bright, lasting for a few minutes, or it can be dim, lasting for many hours.

Luminous products are available in ready mixed luminous paint form, or as luminous paper, fabric, plastic, etc. Phosphorescent paints do not contain any phosphorus, radium, or other dangerous materials.

THE LOBBY refreshment stand area is another part of the theatre which can benefit from adaptable free form decoration achieved through judicious use of luminescent paint and blacklight.

WORD MAGIC

In Employee Relations

WORDS are the most important tools in a theatre executive's employee relations kit. Are your words working for or against you?

By JACK E. BEDFORD

AS YOU KNOW, you can build better employee relations in your theatre if you use the "right" word at the "right" time when talking to employees. And, you also know that it is easier to make this statement than it is to put it into practice in your day-to-day dealings with people under your supervision.

Here are some ideas you can use to put word magic into your dealings with employees in your theatre—words that will work wonders in building better employee relations for you.

YOU, YOU, YOU

Song writers Robert Mellin and Lotar Olias, who penned the lines for the popular tune, "You, You, You," employed word magic in the title. It has natural and universal appeal. When a romantic young man hears a beautiful girl sing the song, he hears the "you, you, you," as though the girl was singing, "me, me, me."

Theatre executives can borrow a page from this fundamental principle of human relations and woo their employees with the powerful words—YOU, YOU, YOU. Employees hear the word "you" and it comes out "me." This psychology automatically puts the employee into the picture and he is more responsive to the ideas and suggestions you make.

Here's a simple little experiment you can try to check and to improve your "you-ability." Describe some work assignment to an employee in about seven short sentences. Keep your description specific, but be brief in the way you describe the duty to the new worker.

Count the total number of words you have used to describe the assignment you selected for this experiment. Count the total number of times you used the words "you" and "your." Divide this by the total number of words you used in your description. This will give you your "you-ability" score. Ten is considered good.

Now add the word "you" to each of the seven sentences you had in your original description. This may require a change in the sentence, but be sure you keep the same thought as you add a "you" to your sentences.

You will see how this addition of the word "you" changes the tone of what you said. You will be making your work assignment in terms of your employee's viewpoint. Word magic will help you get the kind of cooperation you want.

You may feel that you can use "you" too many times in handling work assignments. When you first start to apply this word magic in your human relations problems, you will be very conscious of the number of times you use "you." You may get the idea that you are putting too much emphasis on the "you" idea.

However, you will find that your employees are not conscious of the strong use of "you" in your instructions. They will develop a cooperative attitude, but will not know exactly why they like you as a supervisor—your word magic will be working for you.

AS YOU KNOW

These three little words can be real word magic for anyone who will put them to work. Everytime you use the expression, "as you know," you will give your employee a subtle compliment. You indicate through your word magic that you recognize your employee has plenty of know-how about his job. Yet, you have an opportunity to repeat instructions with extra emphasis.

Regardless of whether your employees know what you are telling them, they will agree. Vanity enters the picture to help this word magic work for you in building better employee relations. Your employees go on record as "knowing" because you have used the "as you know" preface to your instructions.

When you use enough "as you know" in dealing with your employees, you will find that they readily accept your idea or instructions. Before long, the ideas you have planted with this "as you know" psychology become your employee's ideas. Word magic will have done an employee relations job for you.

There are two thoughts to keep in mind in applying this word magic in dealing with employees: (1) use the phrase "as you know" to preface the point you want to make—not after you have made a complete explanation. (2) do not use this word magic on points that the employee could not possibly know—keep it for things he might or should know.

WHAT IS YOUR OPINION?

One problem you probably have is in finding out exactly what your employees' interests and desires are. When you use the word magic, "What is your opinion?", you will be able to draw out your employee's real problem or interests. It will pin-point the problem your employee has, and then you can quickly work out a solution to this problem and give him what he really wants.

Asking an employee for his opinion is a subtle compliment. It gets away from the thought that you are trying to put something over on him. He believes you are a friend because you have asked him his opinion.

"What is your opinion?" is word magic. But, it can be a dangerous device to use in dealing with employees under your supervision. You should be sure that the point it is used on is not a subject that will get the conference off the track.

Another pitfall to avoid is the constant repetition of the same phrase—"What is your opinion?" It is good word magic, but it becomes better if the same idea is expressed in other words. For instance, you might ask, "What do you think of this?" or, "How do you suppose we should do this?" or "What is your thought on this?" Or, "Do you have any ideas on this?"

YES, AND IN ADDITION

This word magic is employed to smoke out the employee's real complaint or gripe. It shows agreement with the employee's ideas, but it asks a question which will tend to bring the real reason for the complaint out into the open. It will be strong word magic for you if you get the right inflection into your voice as you ask, "Yes, and in addition—"

You can put the right emphasis on this phrase if you will state the "yes" part in a positive way. Then, add the "in addition" with a question mark in your voice. Then wait. This pause with an expectant look will

NAC STRESSES DIVERSIFICATION

Eastern Regional Meeting In New York Also Reviews Merchandising And Comes Up with a Series of Profit Making Ideas for Theatres

AUTOMATIC MERCHANDISING equipment manufacturers will have available to theatre operators, within six to eight months, new vending equipment for serving a wide variety of hot food menus in aluminum containers, it was disclosed by Melville B. Rapp, APCO executive vice-president, at the 1959 Eastern Regional Conference sponsored by National Association of Concessionaires last month. The conference, held in the Park-Sheraton Hotel, New York, was attended by 200 concession operators and concessionaires.

NATHAN

Bert Nathan, Bert Nathan Enterprises, Inc., and past president of NAC, served as program chairman and conference moderator. Lee Koken, RKO Industries Corporation, and NAC board chairman, welcomed the registrants and opened the conference with an outline of the profit-making topics to be discussed.

Registrants were urged to take advantage of this opportunity to diversify and expand their business into full-line vending. Rapp emphasized that the "hot food era" is just ahead and that concession operators who have developed the knowledge of food and beverage preparation and service should develop business in this field.

RAPP

During the morning session, Leonard Pollack, director of concessions for Loew's Theatres, lauded the 15 cent candy bar as the most progressive step taken in candy merchandising in recent years. He stressed that its larger size and extra weight gives the public better value and that the 15 cent price printed on the wrapper establishes the price favorably in the consumer's mind to the advantage of the stand operator. Responses from those in the audience seemed to indicate that 15 cent candy bars would gradually replace the 12 cent sellers.

POLLACK

A new sales idea for popcorn was offered in the 48 ounce fluid container, which was being sold successfully in first run theatres for 40 cents. Ice cream still is far from its true sales potential, and it was urged that sellers put greater effort behind bars, sundaes, cones, and other novelties. The use of larger and more attractive display cabinets set into the front counter was pinpointed as one of the ways to stimulate purchases.

A new and successful merchandising idea for hot dogs was offered by operators in "action" motion picture theatres: use two sizes of frankfurter—the ordinary and a jumbo size, and you will be surprised at how many times the buyers will take the larger size for a higher price, stated a concessionaire. Two successful items now available are packaged cotton candy at 15 cents and, in the hot food line, the lobster roll.

Devoted exclusively to refreshment operations at indoor and drive-in theatres, sales of confection, popcorn, beverages, food and other profit producing items, food preparation and vending equipment, concession management and design.

work with theatre owners in developing a higher cents per patron return at the concession stand," according to Emanuel Frisch,

FRISCH

Randforce Amusement Corporation. He emphasized that if a patron is dissatisfied with the food or the service he blames the theatre, not the concessionaire, and this becomes the number one problem for theatre owners who use concessionaires. Frisch recommended that concessionaires should employ more help at the stand, give better service, and take less profit. Admitting that these suggestions represent increased operating costs, he expressed the belief that they would result in more sales and greater profits. Among his other recommendations were to sell only known brand, nationally advertised merchandise, and to work with booking sheets four to six weeks in advance in order to take full merchandising advantage of the screen feature.

Soft ice cream has become one of the largest businesses in the U.S., according to Harold Newman, Century Theatres, Queens Village, N.Y. State and local dairy laws are stringent, he declared; however, the profit potential is excellent, rivaling popcorn. The best operating technique, he advised, was that hard cream items be made by stand employees during slow hours and then sold from the freezer.

NAC president Philip L. Lowe, Lowe Merchandising Service, Inc., reviewed the progress of NAC and outlined its future projects.

"Patrons are ready to buy novelties if they are properly displayed and merchandised," according to Harold Norbitz, National Caterers, Inc. He emphasized that anything that stirs the imagination of a child can be sold in a theatre; however, it must represent a good value and it should be "placed in motion" for maximum attractiveness. The real secret, declared the speaker, is to merchandise novelties in such a way as to catch the eye of the

Pepsi puts Profit into any Picture

Wherever people go for fun, they look for Pepsi-Cola. Pepsi's syrup sales are up 292% since 1950, and Pepsi's price advantage has enabled leading theatre owners to make extra profit from the trend.

Get the picture? More demand, more sales, more income. That's why you'll do well to feature Pepsi—the lowest-priced nationally advertised cola on the market.

PEPSI-COLA NAMES TWO MANAGERS . . .

LITTLE

WASSER

NEW YORK—Promotions of two key personnel of Pepsi-Cola Company were announced recently by company officials.

Paul T. Little has been promoted to manager of total syrup sales development. Little, who has been with Pepsi-Cola since 1939, formerly headed Pepsi's national cup vending sales.

Norman Wasser, manager of theatre sales since July, 1957, has taken on additional responsibilities as manager of national cup vending sales. Wasser has been with the Pepsi-Cola organization since 1949. Both appointments were effective immediately.

. . . AND PREPARES TO INTRODUCE "TEEM"

NEW YORK—A new soft drink named "Teem" having a lemon-lime flavor is shortly to be introduced to the American market by Pepsi-Cola Company, president Herbert L. Barnet has revealed. Teem has been under development by Pepsi research chemists for four years and for the past two years has been market tested anonymously in some 20 cities covering all sections of the country, with highly successful results.

Although cola drinks account for more than two-thirds of all soft drink sales in the United States, and although the sales of Pepsi have bounded forward for nine years, lemon-lime drinks have also shown a steady growth in popularity.

The company is making this new product available to Pepsi bottlers who wish to add a flavor to their present business or to establish an equity in the lemon-lime field. Company officials believe that "Teem" will enable bottlers to increase sales of Pepsi in many outlets which prefer service of both drinks from the same supplier. By the end of 1959, it is estimated, approximately 50 plants will be distributing Teem.

The new drink will be packaged in an emerald-green bottle of swirl design. The first introduction will be in seven-ounce bottles; subsequently, bottles of 10, 12, and 26 ounce size will be added to the line. Six-bottle cartons, decorated in a modern design of green and yellow colors, will be used for take-home sales.

For the present, and until Teem distribution is on a national scale, advertising for the product will be local, in the areas where it is being bottled.

encourage your employee to give you more reasons for his complaint. And, as he continues with his reasons, you will be able to spot the "real" reasons for his complaint.

To make this word magic work best for you, you will need to develop the attitude that the first complaint an employee raises is not necessarily his real complaint. Thus, you will be sincere in wanting him to continue—to give you the "in addition" part of his complaint. It will require a little practice to master this word magic, but it will pay you handsome dividends for years once you have it down pat.

WE, WE, WE

One of a theatre executive's main tasks is to build a spirit of cooperation in the employees. Top management wants it. Employees like their work better when there is plenty of friendly cooperation. And, you will find your work easier when you have built this spirit of cooperation.

"We" is the word magic to use to develop this spirit. It puts employees into the act and makes them feel like they belong on the team. They will take pride in accomplishment. They will feel they will get a share of the credit for everything that is accomplished.

One pitfall of the use of "We" in employee relations is that it should be used to include the employees . . . not to include just the other executives or top management. When "we" is used in place of "I" it defeats its purpose as word magic for building better employee relations in your theatre.

Pastel Marsettes

CHICAGO—Mars, Inc., has started marketing three new flavor additions to its Marsettes line, called Pastel Marsettes. An innovation for Mars is that the three flavors will be available in 15-pound bulk caddies and window boxes in addition to the regular 10-cent roll packaging used for Chocolate Caramel and Creme Mint Marsettes, the first two numbers in the line.

The three flavors are Mint Pastel, Caramel Pastel, and Cherry Pastel, the last being a cream flavor center unique to the Mars operation. The first two contain the same centers found in Chocolate Caramel and Mint Marsettes.

Mars salesmen are taking orders for initial shipments of 10-cent rolls this month.

New Mars Symbol Identifies All Lines

For the first time since its original candy bar, Milky Way, was introduced in 1923, Mars, Inc., is marketing its seven products as a complete family line through the use of a common corporate symbol. The new tie-in trademark, designed to improve product identification, appears in prominent positions on all packaging.

Also being used in all advertising and point-of-purchase displays, the trademark is the stylized Mars name in an oval framing device with a star touching the upper left hand corner.

Nehi Stockholders Vote Company Name Change

NEW YORK—Stockholders of Nehi Corporation, at their annual meeting last month in Wilmington, Del., voted overwhelmingly to change the name of the 54-year old soft drink firm to Royal Crown Cola Company. Announcement of the stockholders' action was made by W. H. Glenn, president, at a special press luncheon held at the Drake Hotel here. International offices and manufacturing facilities are in Columbus, Ga. Glenn said the change from Nehi Corporation to Royal Crown Cola Company reflected the increasing sales importance of the company's spearhead brand—Royal Crown Cola, also known as "RC."

"We are embarking on greatly intensified advertising and promotion programs designed to create an even greater awareness of Royal Crown Cola," Glenn said. "The change in company name will contribute to the product and corporate image we are seeking to create and strengthen. It's another important step in the company's marketing strategy to expand distribution."

Pointing out that the growing consumer demand for Royal Crown Cola is greatly influencing the opening of new important markets, he recalled that one of the company's largest franchises was recently acquired by Vernors covering the greater Detroit area.

A new national advertising program, prepared by the D'Arcy Advertising Company, Royal Crown agency, was announced last month at the firm's international bottlers' meeting in New Orleans, Glenn recalled.

Annual Report

Nehi Corporation's annual report for 1958, —last to be issued under that name, revealed that 1958 was a healthy year in the company's history. Despite unfavorable general business conditions, the company showed an increase in net earnings. The 84th consecutive quarterly dividend was to be paid to stockholders on April 1, 1959.

In January, Edward L. Norton, Birmingham, Alabama, was named chairman of the Finance Committee of the company's board of directors. An important addition to the company's marketing team was the appointment in December, 1958, of Richard H. Burgess as vice-president and director of marketing.

Hot Weather Beverage Offers Profit Possibilities

Fruit-flavored Slush, long a favorite warm weather drink in the south, is fast becoming a top seller throughout the United States and Canada. The refreshment stand in the illustration, located in one of Seattle's top recreational areas, found Slush outselling other drinks just three days after its introduction. No other promotion than the pictured signs on the Sweden SlushMaker and back wall was used, and this was the first time the item had been served in the area.

Increased interest in the drink is attributed to the newly developed Sweden SlushMaker, which eliminates the long freeze-down time and low capacity formerly associated with the drink. The SlushMaker freezes the fruit beverage base mixture to the proper consistency in minutes and holds it for immediate dispensing, it is said. Constant service is assured by the constant freezing action and large 5-gallon storage tank.

The drink is a semi-liquid, consisting of thousands of tiny frozen flavor particles, un-

Record Hot Dog Market Predicted For This Year

Americans are preparing to retain their world hot-dog eating championship in 1959 by consuming 11 billion of the sausage invented in Germany over three centuries ago, according to an estimate made by the National Hot Dog Month Council.

The Hot Dog Report notes that the increase in the number of pounds of hot dogs produced this year could rise more sharply than the increase in the total number of individual hot dogs produced because of an industry maxim called "Theory of Cyclical Hot Dog Diameters." This rule of thumb expresses the observation that housewives in lean economic days demand more hot dogs to the pound. When their budgets are once again ample, they'll buy fewer and fatter wieners in the same weight package. The number of hot dogs to the pound can range all the way from six to twelve.

Lighting for Drive-Ins

By GEORGE T. HOWARD
General Electric Lighting Institute

LIGHT is the only medium which the drive-in operator has at his disposal for on-the-spot advertisement of his theatre.

It seems ridiculous, therefore, to try to save a few cents a day by cutting down on the only method you have for attracting patrons. Instead, use light and use it effectively. For instance, you may place your reader board so that it is perpendicular to the highway flow of traffic. A reader board on the back of the screen tower parallel to the roadway does nothing but cause highway traffic congestion. The passing motorist usually can't read the board until he has already passed the drive-in turnoff. For those of you who are already in this predicament, it is a simple matter to place cut-outs or additional attraction boards beside the roadway. Floodlight these so that motorists know they are approaching them and can read them at night.

There are a number of lighting techniques which do not seem to have been applied by many drive-in operators but which could do a great deal for business. For instance, most operators have a great investment in landscaping at the entrance. But how many of you have ever considered lighting this investment? Much can be done not only to enhance your entrance but also to extend the hours through which you can use this landscaping. Shrubs and flowers in front of your fence can be silhouetted by fluorescent lamps or other floodlighting units to create a very pleasing picture instead of not being seen at all. Trees, for example, are very simple to light and most effective as attention getters. Be careful, however, not to try to light too high a tree behind the screen tower, for this will be distracting to customers inside the drive-in.

For those of you with playground areas at the entrance to the theatre, try floodlighting these at night. This also increases the useful hours of another large investment because many automobiles contain wide-awake children long after dark. It's interesting to see how these children can influence their parents and how you can get two or three more patrons as a result of it.

While the drive-in entrance is important, don't forget the other areas of the drive-in in which you can use lighting: approaches, and traffic lanes in the drive-in, to mark ramps and to mark speaker posts so that motorists can see them. These are but a few of the many places where light and lighting can help you to attract new patrons.

colors can be controlled by the intensity of the blacklight illumination. As a result, fluorescent effects produced with ultra-violet blacklight are today playing an important role in theatre decorations, lobby displays, safety installations, and other applications for the comfort, pleasure, and safety of the public.

Fluorescent colors are now available in any desired shade and in every medium needed. They can be had as water colors, oil paints, lacquers, inks, transparent liquids, etc., for applications by brush, air spray, silkscreen, and printing. Other fluorescent products obtainable are coated papers, fabrics, plastics, chalks, crayons, etc.

BLACKLIGHT

The ultra-violet light used in producing fluorescent effects is popularly referred to as "blacklight." It is that part of the spectrum which follows the visible violet, known as the near ultra-violet, which is entirely harmless and has no effect on the eyes or skin of persons exposed to it. This near ultra-violet should not be confused with the short-wave or far ultra-violet health rays that cause tanning.

Ultra-violet light is invisible to the eye, but in practice, blacklight contains a small amount of visible purple or deep blue light. Blacklight is obtained from regular light sources which have various amounts of ultra-violet. By using special dark-colored glass filters on these light sources, the visible light is absorbed, but the ultra-violet, with small amount of light visible, is transmitted. Only fluorescent colors will glow under this light, while ordinary colors turn dark.

The brightness of a given fluorescent color will depend upon the intensity of the U.V. light. Incandescent lamps contain only small amounts of ultra-violet light and have only limited applications. Carbon arc spotlights are rich in ultra-violet radiation and will furnish very intense ultra-violet light when equipped with proper U.V. filters.

For permanent installations, the high intensity mercury vapor lamps and the fluorescent type U.V. tube lamps are the most practical blacklight sources. They are obtainable in several wattages and different designs to serve various purposes.

Latest Models

The latest models of blacklight lamps are the fluorescent type tubes made from four watt to 40 watt sizes. These tubes are very rich in ultra-violet and are made either with or without the dark ultra-violet filter as an integral part of the tube. When made with the dark ultra-violet filter glass, we have a blacktube that will fit standard fluorescent fixtures. When made without the dark ultra-violet filter, the tube emits some white light together with the ultra-violet, and therefore it is placed in a housing having a window of ultra-violet filter glass. If a blue ultra-violet filter glass is used, we have ultra-blue lamps which will produce 50 per cent more brightness on the fluorescent colors than that obtained with the blacktubes.

The blacklight units made with U.V. tubes are used wherever the lamps can be placed near the objects to be illuminated.

Great Appeal

On the stage, the alert producer was quick to recognize the great appeal blacklight effects have for the audience, by presenting

Synchronized Smells

Unveiled for the first time recently was the Smell-O-Vision brain, the machine that will introduce the first new sensory development in motion pictures since sound. Pictured with the device is producer Michael Todd, Jr., and the Swiss inventor Hans Laube. It took more than 25 years for osmologist Laube to perfect this machine, which is said to reproduce any odor, synchronized with action on the screen. Over forty olfactory sensations will be utilized in Todd's first picture "Scent of Mystery."

those beautiful, spectacular, and magic-like luminous color effects you see time and again in leading houses. Soon blacklight found many applications in the physical theatre, to increase the pleasure, comfort, and safety of the public. The auditorium, being mostly in darkness, was an ideal place for luminescent blacklight decorations, and numerous picture houses are now decorated with fluorescent murals.

Fluorescent murals create a very pleasing atmosphere in the auditorium. Instead of the bare walls, restful pictorial decorations in luminescent colors can turn any theatre into an interesting showplace. The fluorescent colors are applied either directly to the walls, or removable panels are painted and installed wherever practical.

While darkness of the auditorium made it an ideal place for luminescent murals, it also creates a problem regarding safety and convenience to get around in the dark aisles and stairways. Fluorescence can solve this problem. The aisles can be covered with fluorescent carpets, or the regular carpets are treated with fluorescent colors. For blacklight illumination, the four-watt blacktubes are installed at the bottom of the seats along the aisle. Such an installation has been made in the small theatre of the R.C.A. exhibition building in New York.

Very effective lobby displays can be made with fluorescent posters. Care should be taken that such displays be installed in recessed windows or other dimly lit places, since too much surrounding light may destroy the luminous effect desired. Patrons will be much impressed by these posters.

At Drive-ins

In drive-in theatres, luminescent effects can be used to good advantage. Directional signs, place markings, notices, etc., painted with fluorescent paints are made visible by illuminating with blacklight, without interfering with the necessary darkness.

It is generally accepted that the great contrast in brightness between the screen and its surroundings during projection has a detrimental effect on seeing, and that vision can be improved if a dimly lit border surrounds the screen. A simple way of achieving this would be to paint the border with fluorescent paint and illuminate it with blacklight. Any stray blacklight falling on the screen will in no way affect the picture.

Aluminum Tread Design

A new "Traffic-Flow" design for heavy-duty aluminum safety treads has been announced by the manufacturer, Wooster Products, Inc.

The slip-proof "Traffic-Flow" design has a flat abrasive surface that provides a "magnetic-like" feeling when the foot touches each step. A special abrasive formula bonded in a heavy-duty aluminum base gives the Super Stairmaster treads a subtle-but-sure grip quality on heavy traffic stairs, it is said.

Stairmaster treads are nine inches wide with beveled back and fit all steps up to 13 inches wide; length to 12 feet as required. A deep one and one-eighth inch nose of heavy aluminum extends over the edge of the step to protect the face.

and sold under the name of Aireactor DDG, which accomplishes three cleaning functions—deodorizer, detergent, germicide—in one operation.

Aireactor Mist

Aireactor space deodorizer—recognized as one of the most effective and economical odor counteractants and air fresheners—has been formulated into an aerosol and put on the market as Aireactor Mist.

Aireactor space deodorizer is composed of non toxic odor destroying elements of plant life which also provide garden freshness. These, plus glycols and SX-5, make Aireactor Mist the greatest advance in air treatment since the advent of air conditioning, it is claimed.

With the aid of leading research companies, it has been made possible to compress the properties of this air corrective into a 12 ounce Mist container for use in small areas.

This deodorizer is incorporated into the detergent germicide made by this company

Heavy Duty Broom

A new, heavy duty street broom with special cleaning advantages is being marketed by the Moran Brush Manufacturing Company. The Big "M" is designed for use on concrete, stone, macadam, and rough wood floors and pavements in heavily trafficked theatre locations.

This new broom is available in 14 inch and 16 inch sizes. It has a five inch trim of rugged, long-wearing, easy-to-clean, solvent-resistant, black Algil bristle which is unaffected by gas or oil, according to the Moran Co. Maximum flare of the trim has been given to the Big "M" to assure greater sweep and cleaning ability, it is said.

The hardwood maple block has two tapered handle holes to facilitate reversing the handle. This design provides for even wear and ease of handling, and distributes the work load over both sides of the broom block and trim, the manufacturer states.

Floor Covering

A new type of floor covering, resistant to stains and easy to clean, is being introduced by the Du Pont Company.

Made of foam rubber, with a tread surface of tough patterned vinyl, the material is recommended particularly for stairs, halls, entrances, and other theatre areas where easy cleaning is important. It is called "Velvetex" vinyl clad foam rubber cushioned floor covering.

Wear resistance of the new material was checked in a series of abrasion tests conducted by an independent testing laboratory. Results showed the vinyl top surface of Velvetex to be almost twice as resistant to wear as a rubber floor covering, about five times more resistant than a hair carpeting with sponge rubber backing, and wore almost six times longer than a wool carpet runner in the same price range.

Since dirt does not penetrate the vinyl top side of the product, it can be vacuumed, swept, wiped or washed clean. Strong fabric reinforcement will hold tacks and resist tearing.

SMPTE NEWS

New Booklet

"Wide-Screen Motion Pictures," a booklet just published by the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers, deals with the several new methods of motion-picture production and exhibition that came into use during and after 1952. Of primary interest is a comparison of present-day techniques with those that became "standard" during the nineteen twenties.

The revised edition of the booklet, which first appeared in September 1955, includes detailed information on sound pictures, CinemaScope, Cinemiracle, Cinerama, M-G-M-Camera 65, Magoptical Soundtracks, Panavision, Perspecta Sound, Superscope, Technirama, Todd-AO, and VistaVision, with specifications for camera aperture, projector aperture, aspect ratio, direction of film travel, rate of film travel, soundtrack, loudspeaker and screen, for each of the methods. A separate section explains the optical principles used in anamorphic systems.

Lists of ASA Standards and SMPTE test films complete the booklet, available from SMPTE headquarters, 55 West 42 Street, New York 36, for 25 cents.

85th Convention

"Films and Television for International Communication," will be the theme of the SMPTE 85th Semi-Annual Convention at the Fontainebleau Hotel, Miami Beach, May 4-8, according to program chairman Garland C. Misener. Mitchell Wolfson, president of Wometco Theatres and Television Company of Miami, will address a Get-Together Luncheon the opening day.

Six major sessions of the convention will be of interest to the motion picture field, according to Misener.

On the first day, a session on Motion Picture Theatres and Projection will deal with problems in an area that has become complicated, according to industry leaders, by the introduction of new methods and processes. Other important sessions regarding the film industry will include laboratory practice, cinematography, audio-visual communications, sound and multilingual films.

New Boston Section

The Board of Governors of SMPTE has announced the establishment of a new Section in Boston, according to Norwood L. Simmons, SMPTE president.

The establishment of the Boston Section brings to eleven the number of SMPTE Sections throughout the country. Headquarters of other SMPTE Sections are in Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas-Fort Worth, Hollywood, New York, Rochester, San Francisco, Washington, Nashville and Toronto, Canada. The Boston Section includes approximately 150 members in Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island.

Academy Awards Honor Science, Technology

HOLLYWOOD—Awards for scientific or technical achievements at the 31st Annual Academy Awards Show, as announced by George Stevens, president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, were presented last week along with all Oscars decided by secret vote of the Academy members. The RKO-Pantages Theatre was the scene of the event.

Plaques signifying Class II Awards were presented to Don W. Prideaux, Roy Leighton, and the Lamp Division of General Electric Company for the development and production of an improved 10 kilowatt lamp for motion picture set lighting, and to Panavision, Inc., for the design and development of the Auto Panatar anamorphic photographic lens.

Certificates signifying honorable mention for Class III Awards went to Willy Borberg, General Precision Laboratory, Inc., for the development of a high speed intermittent movement for 35mm theatre projection equipment, and to Fred Ponedel, George Brown, and Conrad Boye of the Warner Brothers special effects department for the design and fabrication of a new Rapid Fire Marble Gun.

The Academy Board of Governors expressed its appreciation to each member of the Scientific or Technical Awards Committee, and sub-committees making the recommendations, for their assistance in this year's consideration of entries.

Cinemiracle Booths Shipped To Germany

LOS ANGELES—The first of three newly conceived portable Cinemiracle projection booths has been shipped to Germany, via Hamburg-American lines, from the headquarters here of National Theatres, it has been announced. Two others leave later this spring.

Consigned to William Latady, NT foreign representative, the knockdown mobile booth was to be reassembled for the opening of "Windjammer" in Essen. Unlike the mobile unit designed for Cinemiracle three-panel projection in drive-ins, which NT tested successfully in Las Vegas last fall, this European-style booth can be detached from its trailer and rolled into position inside an auditorium.

Ventarc Installation

NATIONAL VENTARC projection lamps have been installed at the Midway Drive-In, San Diego, Cal., together with a Strong arc slide projector (far left). Kenneth H. Gallion, center, makes adjustment on the Ventarc lamp.

Nat'l Carbon Launches Special Film Program

KANSAS CITY—Theatre owners recently sat "up-front" and played the role of audience for a Hollywood production in Technicolor designed to take some of the mystery out of motion picture projection.

COSBY

At the wind-up session of a three-day "Show-A-Rama" at the Muehlebach Hotel sponsored by the United Theatre Owners of the Heart of America, the meeting's "Showmanship" theme turned logically to one of the most important factors in assuring maximum entertainment value—good screen light.

In the first of a series of showings scheduled for motion picture exhibitors throughout the country, J. W. Cosby, arc carbon sales manager for National Carbon Company, Division of Union Carbide Corporation, screened the 15-minute sound picture "Carbon Arc Projection." Produced for National Carbon Company by John Sutherland, the film is said to be the first picture made to demonstrate the optics of motion picture projection, and the unique role played by the carbon arc in the broad science of light, sight, and color.

Divided about equally between live action and animation, the film explains what the carbon arc is and how it operates, illustrating how the high intensity light source has both the brilliance and color balance required for motion picture projection and production. One animated sequence presents a diagrammatic description of the optical systems used in projection equipment for harnessing the tremendous intensity of light necessary for modern motion picture screens—especially those created for wide-screen systems and the expanses of screen now common in outdoor theatres.

Other sections of the picture show the actual operation of scientific equipment used to measure the crater brilliance of the carbon arc, and give a graphical explanation of how closely the light from a high intensity carbon arc approximates that of natural sunlight. The film also includes a demonstration of how a motion picture film acts as a filter to reproduce on the screen the colors that are possible only if those colors are in the light source used in the projection equipment. The audience learned that only adequate light on a screen can overcome the shutter action that makes a movie screen actually dark nearly half of the time.

Cosby's talk also made use of a series of colored slides selected from illustrations in National Carbon Company's series of Projector Carbon Bulletins. In his explanatory remarks, he pointed out how easy the bulletin material is to understand and use in the projection booth, even for those not technically trained in motion picture projection.

The illustrations discussed by Mr. Cosby were taken from Projector Carbon Bulletins 3, 4, and 5 dealing with Screen Light Checking Procedures (light source); Screen Light Checking Procedures (optical systems); and Operating Precautions, a bulletin containing suggestions for the most efficient operation.

National Carbon Company's 12 trained arc carbon representatives throughout the country stand ready and willing at all times to consult with theatre personnel on how they can get the best possible screen light.

The following Survey represents a re-edited and re-published version of one originally published in two parts in the November 9 and 16, 1955, issues of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR. Persistent requests for copies of the original version encouraged a recent offer to reprint if there was a reader demand. The result was literally hundreds of letters and wires. This separate saveable form is our effort to again render a superior service to the industry's most valued executive readers.

Vol. 61 No. 23

THE SLIDING SCALE METHOD of arriving at

A FAIR FILM PRICING FORMULA

1 CURRENT CONDITIONS . . . and the Need for a NEW Film Pricing Formula.

Of all of the millions of different kinds, types and models of things, that are bought and sold from one end of the earth to the other, we don't believe that there is one single item that fluctuates so widely in price, as entertainment. And the greatest price fluctuation in the entire field of entertainment is unquestionably enjoyed and/or suffered by motion pictures.

Whether at the wholesale level, where a producer sells a motion picture to a distributor or a distributor sells a motion picture to an exhibitor; or at the retail level, where an exhibitor sells a motion picture to the public; price bears little if any relationship to cost, and gyrates widely from the extreme top to the extreme bottom in a matter of days; and for no more definable reasons than first or subsequent "run", or than the public's ever changing taste and pocket-book. We all have heard of the $100,000 "sleeper" that did a world gross of $1,000,000, and of the $5,000,000 super colossal masterpiece that never got off the ground and had trouble grossing $300,000 of film rental. And we all know that the same motion picture that got $2.50 from the patron who saw it from a loge seat at the Music Hall, within a matter of days or even the same day got only 50c from the patron who saw it from an equally comfortable seat at a small theatre "in the sticks." And the film rental paid by the Music Hall on that self same picture could be as much as $250,000 for a five or six week run, while the small theatre "in the sticks" could have trouble paying $250 for its five or six days.

Yes, motion pictures is a business of vast fluctuations with no certain top and no certain bottom. And that is why any unbalance, either enlarging or constricting the supply source, can give an inordinate advantage to either the buyer or the seller. Much of the strife, lawsuits, requests for government intervention, 5,000 to 6,000 closed theatres, ulcers and heart attacks, in the business today, are directly chargeable to the constricting of the supply of new features that seemed to immediately follow the "divorcement" of producer owned theatres, that were the latter's guaranteed outlets and therefore their responsibilities. They are also chargeable to the needs and desires of producer-distributors to economize on the number of prints on any given picture. So this is a "seller's market"! And unless the "sellers" exercise a lot more judgment than they have in the past few years, and leave a sufficient percentage of the boxoffice "take" at the exhibition level, so that exhibition also can keep its "plant" in order and show a profit, there will be a lot more theatres close, and self-cannibalizing of the business that will bankrupt exhibition, and eventually destroy production, and distribution also, as we know them today.

It has been said by distributors that only a few thousand theatres represent 85% of their national gross, and that the other 10,000 to 12,000 late runs and small towns represent only 15%. Accepting their totals for the sake of argument, what producer can show sufficiently more than a 15% profit on domestic sales, so that this mass of late runs and small towns can be profitably ignored? And would ignoring them result in great savings in overhead, advertising or physical distribution? We doubt it. With saturation bookings in most key runs, and an assortment of picture sizes and sound tracks, it would still require 450 to 600 prints of any big picture to service the 3,500 to 4,000 big key runs. It would still take the same advertising in newspapers, national magazines, fan magazines, TV, and radio, for all of that is aimed at the success of those big key runs. It would still cost just as much to make the picture in Hollywood. Nothing would be saved except a few sales salaries, and all costs would need to be charged against 3,500 to 4,000 dates, instead of against the 10,000 to 16,000 current potential.

So there is little merit to this distributor view except as a bit of sales persuasion. Those 7,000 to 12,000 small situations are a by-product that cost little or nothing to serve, and represent a large portion of the profit margin. The producer or distributor who ignores this fact, and permits them to close in large numbers for lack of adequate profit, commensurate with their investment and management effort, is committing a form of business hari-kari.

Some wise distributors have recognized this fact. The late Al Lichtman of 20th Century-Fox gave public recognition to it when he released a statement to the effect that any theatre unable to gross more than $1,000 per week should be sold at flat (as compared to percentage) prices. Of course we are told that some of his own branches immediately made the "flat price" whatever the highest percentage return, on their biggest pictures playing the particular theatre, had ever been; so that the letter of his words was kept but not their spirit. Others such as the late Bill Rogers of MGM have similarly recognized the situation, either publicly or privately, but little has been done except for the spot "adjustments" that put the theatreman in the position of a panhandler asking for favors "with his hat in his hand."

A good share of the responsibility for this situation rests squarely on shoulders of exhibitors themselves. Competition at the retail level has engendered distrust of one another, and a "keep-your-guard-up" attitude, that was often with good reason. And smart film salesmen were quick to encourage ill will, to their own advantage. The recent organization of ACE (American Congress of Exhibitors) might serve to give exhibition a united front and a common voice; but it is too young to judge its abilities or effectiveness. For many years two national associations of theatremen seemed to place greater emphasis on the "local autonomy" of their territorial units than on the national unity and solidarity that could command respect. Other splinter associations, usually local to some one of the 31 distribution areas, only add to the confusion. In some other distribution territories there are no exhibitor organizations at all, and the only thing all exhibitors have in common is an admitted mutual distrust. And the 10 national distributors, whether or not they did it in fact, had the opportunity to take advantage of the confused mob.

This does not apply to all territories. In New York where large remnants of the "divorced" former producer affiliated circuits co-exist with several large independent circuits in a spirit of mutual confidence, there is no confusion and film prices and percentage formulas are known to be very fair, and much lower than in neighboring territories. In several areas of the Middle West, notably Cleveland and Detroit, large co-ops working in a spirit of mutual confidence with large circuits have been able to maintain a fair balance in film prices that even protected the small independent runs around and behind them. But where such an equalizer does not exist, film prices have risen to the realm of arbitrary confiscation, and while there is no justification for such action, formerly honest men have been forced to boost their reported overhead, or to steal on their reported grosses, in order to stay alive.

NOTE: Much of the factual knowledge and theatre wisdom, contained in this Survey, stems from practical day-in-and-day-out theatre experience that is not shared by any other Motion Picture Industry trade paper. We hope this Survey will encourage fruitful discussions, and possibly some worthy conclusions, in the many facets of our great industry. It is ours to serve!

This is not a happy situation. Nor is it one that promises a brilliant future for this business, whether producer, distributor, or exhibitor.

What are the alternatives?

We don't like the prospect of being Government "regulated" even if the Government would accept the duty without charge. We can't believe that Government will dictate what a distributor can charge an exhibitor for film and not protect the good old voting public by also dictating what an exhibitor can charge a patron for admission. We had experience during World War II with Government forms and red tape, and the pécadilloes of "do" and "don't" through which Government methods drive businessmen crazy. And from what we hear from hundreds of organized and unorganized theatremen across the country we don't believe they want Government "regulation" either. In fact, we'd be willing to lay 2-to-1 that a poll of exhibitor opinion on the subject, given any other choice, would bury Government "regulation" under a landslide.

We're afraid that we also agree with the distributors that you can't arbitrate film prices either. Whether horses or battleships, if the fellow who owns them says they are worth $10, how can you arbitrate your belief that they are only worth $5, because you can only resell them for $6? Maybe someone else can sell 'em for $20! It is all "if" and the seller has just as much God-given right to believe his value as the buyer has to believe his. How are you going to arbitrate that? And, particularly in picture business, where a picture can die in one theatre and set a new house record in another theatre not too far away, how can arbitration set up a fair picture price?

Then again, who are those Solomons who will be able to find the time to carefully consider and to weigh all factors concerning 365 days of film in 18,000 theatres, some roofed and some drive-in? Having done a bit of "arbitrating" ourselves we happen to know the time and study required, and we don't think there are enough competent men, with useable industry experience, in the world today, to serve as arbitrators on that great a volume.

There is a third alternative that we like better and that we believe will prove better for producers, distributors and for exhibitors. It presupposes that producers and distributors will accept the fact that virtually no new roofed theatres are being built; and that the existing ones are getting older and more obsolete with each passing day, and without any possibility of exhibitors reinvesting in modernization when they can barely, or are just failing to, make ends meet. It presupposes that producers and distributors will accept the fact that in spite of 4,400 new drive-in theatres (many seasonal) constructed in the past ten years, and a constantly growing population, their theatre sales possibilities have actually shrunk. It presupposes that exhibitors want only a fair live-and-let-live share of the admissions dollar and as partners with production and distribution are willing to give them an honest count in every way, backed by positive audits. And it presupposes that exhibitors, with respect for themselves as businessmen, will go a long way to avoid the need for "hat-in-hand" adjustments, and will adopt with open arms any method or formula that is fair.

There is also one final, and most important, point! It presupposes that producers, distributors and exhibitors, are sincere men-of-good-will who only want dollars that belong to them and to which they are fairly, honestly and morally entitled. All of this is a waste of time, and there is no need to proceed further, if our business has degenerated into the rule of fang and claw. Under that eventuality, and dealing with thieves and shysters, the only alternative is a baseball bat or scatter gun. But we don't believe the latter to be the case! We are proud of our business and of the friendships we have made in it. We have yet to meet the man with whom we couldn't negotiate fairly when face to face. We believe that a fair to all FILM PRICING FORMULA, applicable to theatres of known admission scales, sizes, types and average grosses, is possible to arbitrate and establish for the eternal well being of all in this business.

We also believe that such a formula can be made to fairly adjust film pricing demands as they apply to first, second and subsequent runs; and in doing so can save this industry most of the continuing flood of multi-million dollar law suits asking triple-damages that currently jam the courts.

2 ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD . . . What it is . . . and Why an AUDIT is Necessary.

Any LIVE-AND-LET-LIVE FILM PRICING FORMULA must be based on a percentage of what is left after the operating overhead has been recouped. It is elementary that the theatre must recoup its operating overhead (and this has nothing to do with return of invested capital or of profit), for any percentage deal is nothing more or less than a short-term partnership into which the theatre owner invests his right in a pretty high priced piece of specialized real estate on the main stem, and into which the producer-distributor invests his right in a pretty high priced piece of specialized film entertainment. The theatremen can't sell tickets without the film and the producer-distributor can't sell tickets without the theatre. Operating overhead is a sum of money that is mutual to their partnership, and a tool of the whole partnership, just as advertising should also be.

When 90-10% deals are set up, all distributors recognize the need to recoup overhead first. Why is this not also important on any other percentage deal?

The administration of operating overhead rests in the lap of the theatre and is paid by it, only because the latter is stationary and fixed to the particular locale. Whether the "partnership" is for one day, one week, or one month, it is possible for the theatre to hire and to buy on a weekly, monthly or annual basis, thereby procuring the best local prices on everything, and to split all individual costs into the proportionate share represented by the "partnership" days.

As a partnership obligation, however, operating overhead must be an exact, agreed-on, ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD, resulting from an exact and acceptable AUDIT by a recognized Certified Public Accountant. It shouldn't be necessary for such an audit to be made more than once each year, and it shouldn't be necessary for it to go beyond a summary of the operating overhead alone. It could be based on, but should in no way conflict with, the regular annual profit-and-loss audit of the particular theatre, for it can confine itself to the "accounts payable" side alone. Just as a suggestion, we certainly believe it would be possible for arrangements to be made with a big, prominent, "name" auditor like Price-Waterhouse to do such audits on a rotating annual fee basis that would be well within the price range of any theatre. It might even be based on a "per seat" basis like organization dues.

Bolstering this thought still further, we wish to point out that MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, LIFE, TIME, THE NEW YORK TIMES, and any other reputable publication that solicits advertising from advertising agencies and national advertisers, submit their circulation orders and income to the skilled auditors of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, Inc. for a thorough annual audit, without disclosing the private data from which their profit and loss statements are drawn. Such specialized audits are general practice in the publishing industry. And are practical!

Now! What is ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD?

We suppose the best quick description would be the operating expenses of the particular theatre, both average and specific, for the term of the partnership, i.e. the particular playdates.

More specifically, OPERATING OVERHEAD, for purposes of such a partnership, can be broken down under the following heads:

1. Rent
2. Advertising
3. Payroll and Payroll Taxes
4. Insurance
5. Light, Power, Air Conditioning and Heat
6. Maintenance, Repairs, and Supplies
7. Messenger Service
8. Telephone, Telegraph, Stationery, Traveling, etc.
9. Petty Cash and Miscellaneous
10. Cost of all Shorts or Added Attractions

A further explanation of what should be included under such general heads is as follows:

RENT. This would normally be the sum paid to the owner of the theatre building, either as a fixed sum per month or per year, or as a percentage of the gross receipts. All "extras," such as excess water use, increased taxes, etc., covered by the lease should be included. If the property is owned by the theatremen, "rent" would be considered as all interest on a funded debt or legitimate mortgage, normal Government allowed depreciation on the building and its equipment, bank interest on the depreciated value of all capital assets and all real estate taxes and water rents. Any rental income received by the theatre from stores or offices should be subtracted from the above. A weekly average for the preceding 52 weeks should be established.

A hybrid of both of these would be the operator who leases a building which he has equipped. His rent would therefore be not only what he pays the landlord, but the depreciation on his equipment as well.

ADVERTISING. This should refer to all advertising purchased by the theatremen and by the distributor to benefit the particular playdate. Newspaper space, radio, TV, posters, trailers, and any special sign work other than the normal changeable letter marquee signs, should be included. On a big picture where the producer-distributor wishes to spend more than the usual theatre budget, this can either come "off the top" (added to the operating overhead), or can be shared by each on the eventual percentage payoff, subject to a prior agreement. Postage or messenger service necessary to the distribution of heralds, window cards, etc., should be included.

PAYROLL AND PAYROLL TAXES. Under this heading would be the salaries of employees working in the theatre or occupied in some facet of its management, with the exception of those who tend the confection stand, or service stores, apartments, or offices that are not a part of the theatrical unit. Basically the manager, assistant manager, projectionists, ushers, cleaners, doorman, cashiers, and maintenance engineers are considered house staff; but to this should be added the booking fees paid to a buying and booking agency or to a buying and booking executive. In the case of large circuit operation, a fee of 5% to 10% of the overhead is included in the payroll for home office expense. A similar fee should be allowed whenever ownership assumes the buying and booking decisions, for the term "manager" then relates to house management alone, which bears a much lower salary scale.

The employer share of any city, state, or federal payroll taxes would naturally be added to payroll in computing overhead.

For all practical purposes, total payroll can be averaged per week for the preceding 52 week period, for fluctuations will never be so great as to seriously affect average overhead.

INSURANCE. This should include all fire, theft, holdup, vandalism, public liability, and property damage insurance premiums, averaged weekly even though paid on an annual or three-year basis. In drive-ins, coverage of wind and storm damage to fences, trees, screen towers, etc., should also be included. All such insurance constitutes protection for the "partnership" during the term of their agreement and is a very legitimate overhead item.

LIGHT, POWER, AIR CONDITIONING AND HEAT. While all four of these items may be concentrated into the electric bill, it is possible that one or more could result from equipment using gas, oil, or coal as the energy source. Combinations are also possible. As a result, under this heading should be placed all bills covering current, fuel, freon, boiler cleaning and seasonal care relating to these four necessary utilities for the preceding 52 weeks and their weekly average obtained.

MAINTENANCE, REPAIRS AND SUPPLIES. While projector and sound services, needed equipment repairs, cleaning equipment and supplies used by the staff, and the periodic outside cleaning and repairing of rugs, draperies, uniforms, etc., form the purpose for the maintenance and repairs heading, great care should always be used not to include capital improvements or plant additions of any kind. True overhead can only include the costs of maintaining and repairing what is already a necessary part of the property and important to its efficient operation. Supplies include tickets, carbons, lamp bulbs, and similar items that are consumed as a part of the theatre operation. Items given to, or resold to, the patron, may be a premium, a service, or a confection, but are most certainly not supplies. The average weekly cost of the above during the preceding 52 week period should suffice.

MESSENGER SERVICE. This is the weekly charge for film and advertising transportation between the theatre and the film distribution center. Usually there is only one company serving a particular area, and their rates are subject to Interstate Commerce Commission approval. The cost of this function including any R.R. expressage is permissible under overhead.

TELEPHONE, TELEGRAPH, STATIONERY AND TRAVELING. Only such charges, under the above four headings, as are directly chargeable to the operation of the theatre, are permitted. These are normal business charges applicable to any business. Personal use by employees or management should be paid for personally and credited. Traveling must only be such as is necessary to the booking or buying negotiations, and to the purchase of supplies and equipment.

PETTY CASH AND MISCELLANEOUS. Only such petty cash items as relate to one of the above can be considered as overhead, and they would therefore be better considered under their proper bracket. The reference is made here only to account for it. Under miscellaneous can be lumped: (a) dues to local business and national trade associations; (b) legal fees directly attributable to theatre operation; and (c) auditing fees.

ALL SHORT SUBJECTS, NEWS REELS OR ADDED ATTRACTIONS. This is an item that is often overlooked or forgotten because it is part of the entertainment cost rather than of the overhead cost on the theatre's books. However, for the "partnership" in a percentage playdate, it is mutual overhead that must be paid first, before the percentage begins to operate.

The above ten brackets will pretty well cover the "partnership" overhead. They should not be tampered with, padded, kited or disallowed in an effort to favor either partner. Once their existence and accuracy has been proved by an audit they should be accepted as the mutual "nut" and not subjected to chiseling of any sort.

A somewhat recent proof, that the majority of the above 10 classifications follow distributor thinking, was a Paramount Film Distributing Corp. form No. 5509 E known as an EXPENSE SCHEDULE, provided by them as a rider to be "attached to and made part of" contracts for their production "THE DESPERATE HOURS" that was released several years ago. While this production was offered on a percentage basis that differed from the normal Sliding Scale, the EXPENSE SCHEDULE in our possession and with which we have compared much of the above, specified "the average weekly operating expenses of the theatre for the 52 weeks immediately preceding the date hereof." It then actually lists or refers to all of the above except Telephone, Telegraph, Stationery and Traveling. While we may refer to "Miscellaneous" where they refer to "Other Expenses," both the itemization and the requested data show sound thinking and a close adherence to what is true ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD.

This similarity in the understanding of theatre operation, and what actually constituted ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD on the part of Paramount, is probably a reflection of the theatre background and theatre knowledge of executives such as Barney Balaban who actively run that company. After all, before "divorcement," they were the largest theatre circuit men of all. So who could know more about it?

3 PLAYING TIME UNITS . . . and Their Application to OVERHEAD and GROSS.

While we now see that operating overhead can become a positive, auditable certainty, we still have the problem of dividing overhead, so that the producer-distributor and the exhibitor who become "partners" in a midweek (low grossing potential) series of playdates, don't carry an inordinately big share of the week, as compared to the "partners" in a week-end (high grossing potential) series of playdates.

Wiser men than we answered this problem satisfactorily many years ago with what are known as PLAYING TIME UNITS.

While PLAYING TIME UNITS may vary from territory to territory, and under six-day (no Sunday) operation, as compared to the usual seven-day operation, the principal is the same. The midweek days of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, represent one single unit each. In a seven-day town, some distributors consider Saturday worth three units and Sunday worth two units; while others will consider Saturday worth two units and Sunday worth three units. A third popular method is to consider both Saturday and Sunday as worth two and one half units each. We also know of some small town and subsequent runs where Saturday and Sunday are agreed to be worth only two units each, for a weekly total of nine units. But the result in all seven-day towns is usually the same total of 10 units. Six-day towns follow the same valuations for the five mid-week days of one unit each; but Saturday is standard at two units. So the result in all six-day towns is the same total of seven units.

More currently, there is some feeling that some of the mid-week nights should be further devaluated. Walter F. J. Higgins, of the Associated Prudential Circuit of Long Island, believes that Mondays and Tuesdays should only carry ½ units, Wednesdays and Thursdays one unit, Sundays and Fridays two units, and Saturdays three units.

Examples of how this principal of PLAYING TIME UNITS would work in a seven-day town where a hypothetical theatre had a $620 average weekly overhead, or a $62 unit overhead, are as follows:

(a) Picture Number One plays Tuesday (1), Wednesday (1) and Thursday (1) for three PLAYING TIME UNITS so the overhead chargeable against its particular playdate is three times $62 or $186.

(b) Picture Number Two plays Thursday (1), Friday (1) and Saturday (2) (in an area where Saturday represents two units) for four PLAYING TIME UNITS so the overhead chargeable against its particular playdate is four times $62 or $248.

(c) Picture Number Three plays Thursday (1), Friday (1), Saturday (2) and Sunday (3) for seven PLAYING TIME UNITS so the overhead chargeable against its particular playdate is seven times $62 or $434.

Examples of how this would work in a six-day town (seven units) where a hypothetical theatre has this same $620 average weekly overhead, or a $88.57 unit overhead, are as follows:

(a) Picture Number One plays Monday (1), Tuesday (1), and Wednesday (1) for three PLAYING TIME UNITS so the overhead chargeable against its particular playdate is three times $88.57 or $265.51.

(b) Picture Number Two plays Thursday (1), Friday (1), and Saturday (2), for four PLAYING TIME UNITS so the overhead chargeable against its particular playdate is four times $88.57 or $354.28.

PLAYING TIME UNITS therefore are a very simple method of splitting anything relating to the fluctuating weekly business of the theatre into more fair and realistic portions reflecting the changeable values of days. On percentage engagements they tend to minimize the clamor by all producer-distributors for the limited number of higher grossing "weekend" dates. And they become a very positive and honest method of analyzing and evaluating not only overhead, but grosses, film rentals, and many other things relating to a theatre's business.

We have seen how PLAYING TIME UNITS can be applied to a just allocation of overhead against any playdate, regardless of the number of days or of which days of the week. This same simplicity can be applied to any gross. If a picture played Monday (1), Tuesday (1), and Wednesday (1) and grossed $700.00, the three units divided into the gross would show a PLAYING TIME UNIT gross of $233.33. Or if it played Friday (1), Saturday (2) and Sunday (3) and grossed the same $700.00, the six units divided into the gross would show a PLAYING TIME UNIT gross of $116.66. The former should reflect a ten-unit week of $2,333.33, while the latter should reflect a ten-unit week of $1,166.66.

4 SLIDING SCALE . . . Its Theory, Objectives, and Adaptability to Arbitration.

We have devoted so much space to ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD and to PLAYING TIME UNITS because both are key points in the SLIDING SCALE Method of arriving at a Fair Film Pricing Formula. A thorough knowledge of what they are, and how they operate is important.

Explained simply, the SLIDING SCALE Method of arriving at a Fair Film Pricing Formula is nothing more or less than an unfixed price that moves up and down in direct relationship to the grossing ability of a particular picture at a particular boxoffice; and without any influence from what the same picture did at any other boxoffice. Under it, the negotiations between buyer and seller should concern themselves completely with the establishment of the scale or "slide" that will price their future business "partnership"; but they can't concern themselves with specific prices because each picture is going to price itself with its own specific earnings. The picture that draws a large patronage and earns a big gross is going to get a top price. The picture that "falls on its face" and draws a small patronage, with a resultant loss to everybody concerned, is going to get a minimum price.

No extraneous outside influences, such as a scarcity of playable film, competition with neighboring theatres, opposition to a theatre circuit able to crack the whip, or an "eager beaver" exchange employee trying to impress his boss with his ruthlessness, can convert a fairly set up SLIDING SCALE into a "squeeze" that will gradually drain away all capital resources from long established theatres and force their closing, to the detriment of their owners, of the patrons they served, and of the producer-distributors who lose a potential future customer. But higher and higher percentage demands, such as straight 50%-and-no-review (or, "we want 50c right from the first buck, and we don't even care if you don't recoup your overhead"), and 90-10% after-overhead-with-the-advertising "off the top" (or, "we want 10% of the advertising out of your 10c"), are very often based today on nothing more intrinsic than just such extraneous outside influences. Under SLIDING SCALE, fairly established and fairly operated, features are priced exactly at what they earn, no more, and no less!

And no extraneous outside influence, such as "controlled situations," "gentlemen's agreements" among competitive theatres, membership in a theatre circuit able to crack the whip, or a "buddie," either social or financial, among exchange employees, (while none of these are very common after so many years of a "sellers" market), can enable a theatre to pay too little under a fairly set up SLIDING SCALE. We again repeat, under SLIDING SCALE, fairly established and fairly operated, features are priced exactly at what they earn, no more, and no less!

To be completely fair to both "partners" SLIDING SCALE should have no top and no bottom to the "slide." In other words, it should be possible for the producer-distributor to move all the way up if his picture can do a proportionate gross, but it should also be possible to move all the way down if it fails to even recoup the overhead. However, theatremen long ago, and even before the current "sellers" market, concluded that all features capable of carrying a show and therefore worth playing at percentage at all were worth at least 20% (in some territories as low as 15%). And so few features, in any period of years, ever get into the really top income gross, that the normal SLIDING SCALE concerns itself only with the "slide" between 20% and 50%, with the latter acting as a "split figure" over which all gross is divided 50-50.

Men make motion pictures, and all men are only mortals who can make mistakes. The top producers in Hollywood, or anywhere else, are those who, over a period of years, have made the least "mistakes." And by "mistakes" we mean either dull, unimaginative, badly directed, badly acted, or badly conceived features, that have the one thing in common that the paying patron doesn't want to see them.

When these "mistakes" come along, producers and distributors

The PLAYING TIME UNIT can probably be considered as the heart of the SLIDING SCALE method, just as it is probably the most important single aid to the analyzing of any percentage engagement. To prove that it is currently accepted by producer-distributors in evaluating any playdate, we again refer the reader to the final lines on Paramount's Expense Voucher on "THE DESPERATE HOURS" that was mentioned earlier and to a similar United Artists voucher on "NOT AS A STRANGER." A direct quotation is as follows: "The weekly operating expenses shall be fairly prorated in the usual manner in computing license fees for fractions of a week, i.e. on the basis of—for Saturday,—for Sunday and—for each other day."

It should not be necessary to further justify the usefulness and rightness of PLAYING TIME UNITS in this business.

seem to be in agreement that the theatremen should pay for them, even if the paying patrons won't. To a certain extent, it was the dumping of a number of such "mistakes," produced during the War years, but held up for cutting and re-editing, that put this business into a tail spin in 1947. We don't think anyone ever starts out to make such pictures, but they are a by-product of production and when they turn up they should be paid for by production and not by the theatre side that had nothing to do with their existence, and is not considered to have any esthetic taste. SLIDING SCALE, keyed to the patron dollars only, rather than to production costs, star salaries, or whether the director is married to somebody's sister, is the great equalizer of production mistakes. It can help the top producer, who makes few "mistakes," and turns out a high percentage of boxoffice pictures, to be even bigger than he is today. And it can expose the inept or incompetent by subjecting his "mistakes" to the full spotlight of the public's ticket buying, without cushioning the blow by having theatres dig into their reserves in order to minimize production loss.

Under today's production system, with top producers, directors, authors and stars participating on a percentage basis in the profits from their pictures, this latter point should make SLIDING SCALE selling formulas attractive to production. One great advantage of SLIDING SCALE is that each picture must stand on its own feet. A film salesman can't ask a theatre to overpay on some "turkey" in order to make its National Gross look good, and adjust the loss against a flat buy of some honest picture that is worth more. Under SLIDING SCALE selling formulas an honest picture must get an honest return for all of its owners from its honest gross.

Another desirable attribute of SLIDING SCALE selling formulas, is their adaptability to peaceful arbitration of differences by men who know the vagaries of this very unique business, rather than litigation directed by lawyers who know very little about it, before judges who seem to know even less. Should there be some point dealing with ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD, distribution of the 10 weekly PLAYING TIME UNITS, CLEARANCE, etc., it will apply to that one theatre, and all of its dealings for a year or more, so that any time given to the resolving of the differences will be of a semi-permanent nature and worth the effort. There can be no differences of opinion having any relation to price, and there can be no need for seeking "adjustments," hat-in-hand or otherwise, for each picture prices itself, and to the percentage point fixes its own financial success or failure.

If the constant haggling over price, with the distributor overpricing and creating new and tougher sales policies and demands with each new picture, and with the theatremen retaliating with every dodge and device at his command, can be eliminated from this business, at least from that big segment that follows the 3,500 or 4,000 key runs, there would seem to be a very real chance for a more peaceful business, and the time for a very real effort by all to exploit and sell a greater share of the public than is now regularly patronizing motion pictures. The average theatremen today spends so much time fighting film salesmen, and ferreting out the "gimmicks" in ever changing but always tough sales policies, that he has little time for the promotional work and individual picture exploitation, that would increase film revenues by increasing the national gross that the public spends. Faced with "double week-ends," "double playing time," "increased admissions," "no allowance for the second feature," "no coop advertising," etc., the incentive is gone. Peace would give him this time, and would result in a healthier business.

SLIDING SCALE selling formulas would also have a particular attraction for the operators of the nation's 4,400 drive-in theatres. By their very roofless nature such theatres are subject to all adverse weather conditions such as thunder and lightning, heavy rains, sleet, snow, etc. They also have only a limited peak season so that the loss of only a few summer nights can mean the difference between an entire season's profit or loss. Heavy rains ruining attendance on a night when an important high priced picture is being shown on straight percentage could force an owner to dig into his own pocket to defray the loss. Under SLIDING SCALE selling formulas, lack of paying patrons, for any reason, would reflect itself in the eventual film price. But, by the same token, the slightest upward surge in attendance would also reflect itself.

We repeat: You will never "steal" a picture under SLIDING SCALE; but you will never get "hurt" either!

5 EXPLANATION AND CONSTRUCTION Of Three Different SLIDING SCALE Methods.

Generally speaking, all SLIDING SCALE selling formulas are based on overhead and are the same in operation and intent, with the only variable being the profit percentage basis on which the theatre will be permitted to operate. Some very optimistic scales that we have inspected permit the theatre to keep the same profit as the film price, which is the same as saying a straight 50-50 "partnership" after the overhead has been recouped. That would be a most unusually favorable deal that any theatremen would jump at in this present day and age. Hoping to complete any such arrangement however is so far into the realm of dreams that any discussion here would be a waste of space.

The more common "slides" are as follows:

(A) Under which the theatre is allowed to keep as Profit a sum equal to 50% of what is paid to the distributor as Film Rental.

(B) Under which the theatre is allowed to keep as Profit a sum equal to 33⅓% of what is paid to the distributor as Film Rental.

(C) Under which the theatre is allowed to keep as Profit the same % of what is paid to the distributor as Film Rental, as that Film Rental relates to the Boxoffice Gross.

Following determination of which of these "slides" will be acceptable to the distributor, the next point for decision is whether the percentage "steps," governing the slide range (between 20% and 50%), will be at 1% intervals or at 2½% intervals. It would be possible to use intervals of a fraction of a percentage point, but this would prove to be more time consuming than it was worth, and just a matter of splitting hairs. It would also be possible to use intervals of 5%, but this might be considered just a little too loose. Normal "steps" in general use are either 1% or 2½%, with the former the most common.

With ALLOWABLE OVERHEAD accepted by the distributor, with agreement on the PLAYING TIME UNITS that will control, with a determination of which of the three "slides" (A, B or C) will be allowed, and with a decision on the percentage "steps" on which the "slide" will operate, the rest is just mathematics. Because of variables in one or more of these four points, particularly in overhead that is seldom alike in any two theatres, any SLIDING SCALE is more or less tailor made for the particular theatre; but all of the ingredients are here.

SLIDE "A"

Just to start, let us presume that you have a theatre in a seven day town and that your overhead has been audited and allowed at $780.00 per week, or $78.00 per playing time unit, with Saturday and Sunday each worth 2½ units. The distributor agrees to let you operate under Slide "A" (retaining 50% of the film rental as profit), and steps are to be at 1% intervals. To set up the gross, up to which you would pay a 20% film rental, with one half of that (10% of gross) as theatre profit, overhead would obviously represent the remaining 70%. By dividing 70% into the 100% which represents the gross, you arrive at a relationship or ratio of 1.429. Multiplying your overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.429 you arrive at a gross unit of $111.46, or a weekly gross of $1,114.60. (Checked out: 20% of $1,114.60 equals $222.92 of film rental; one half of that film rental equals $111.46 of theatre profit; add these two items to $780.00 of overhead; and the total is $1,114.38). For a date that represents only three playing time units (i. e. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday), multiply the gross unit of $111.46 by three, or $334.38. For a date that represents only four and one-half playing time units (i.e. Thursday, Friday and Saturday) multiply the gross unit of $111.46 by four and one-half or $501.57. But at this particular SLIDING SCALE "A," whenever a gross unit of $111.46 is reached you pay 20% for your film.

To set up the gross, at which you would pay a 21% film rental, and earn one half of that (10½% of the gross) as theatre profit, overhead would only represent the remaining 68½% of the gross. By dividing 68½ into 100 you arrive at a ratio of 1.460. By multiplying your overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.460 you arrive at a gross unit of $113.88 or a weekly gross of $1,138.80. So at this particular SLIDING SCALE "A," whenever a gross unit of $113.88 is reached, you pay 21% for your film.

Now to take a big jump, to set up the gross under this SLIDING SCALE "A" at which you would pay 41% film rental, and earn one half of that (20½% of the gross) theatre profit, overhead would only represent the remaining 38½% of the gross. By dividing 38½ into 100 you arrive at a ratio of 2.597. By multiplying your overhead unit of $78.00 by 2.597 you arrive at a gross unit of $202.57. So at this particular SLIDING SCALE "A," whenever a gross unit of $202.57, or a weekly gross of $2,025.70, is reached, you pay 41% for your film.

(Checked out: 41% of a $2,025.70 gross equals $830.54 as film rental; one half of that (20½% of the gross) equals $415.27 as theatre profit; add these two items to $780.00 of overhead; and the total is $2,025.81.)

In any use of percentage figures, even to decimal-point-three-times, there are certain to be discrepancies of a few pennies in any ultimate total. This is not important to the distributor or to the theatre, for it is a very minor "breakage" that benefits one or the other just about an equal number of times.

If this were your theatre, you could now work out a complete chart of the grosses under SLIDING SCALE "A," at each 1% step, so that in operation you would only need to refer to your chart instead of doing individual mathematical computations. (NOTE: Actual "ROBOT" CHARTS for the three Slides, "A," "B," and "C," and at 1% and 2½% steps between 20% and 50%, will be presented in the following chapter.)

It also should be noted that, should your chart be mislaid or unavailable, it is always possible to figure backwards from the gross and to arrive at the film rental and profit. As an example, let us take the last gross to be checked out under this Slide "A." Suppose we know that the gross is $2,025.70 and that the overhead is $780.00. By dividing the gross into the overhead we can determine what percentage the latter bears to the former or 38½%. This leaves us 61½% or $1,245.81 to be divided two thirds for film rental ($830.54) and one third for profit ($415.27).

As gross varies through pennies and dollars, you pay off at the percentage point on your chart that is nearest to the particular gross. We noted earlier that a gross unit of $111.46 paid off at 20%, while a gross unit of $113.88 paid off at 21%. The dividing line would be $112.67, with 20% paid under that line, and 21% paid over that line. Once again, the "breakage" favors the distributor just about as often as it favors the theatre.

SLIDE "B"

Now let us see how Slide "B" (retaining 33⅓% of the film rental as profit) would work out on these same film deals.

The gross at which you would pay a 20% film rental with one third of that, or 6⅔%, as theatre profit, would leave 73⅓% as representing the overhead unit of $78.00. Dividing 73⅓ into 100 you arrive at a relationship or ratio of 1.364. Multiplying the overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.364 you arrive at a gross unit of $106.39, or a weekly gross of $1,063.90, under SLIDING SCALE "B."

(Checked out: 20% of $1,063.90 equals $212.78 film rental; one third of the $212.78 film rental equals $70.93 theatre profit; add these two items to $780.00 of overhead; and the total is $1,063.71).

The gross at which you would pay 21% under SLIDING SCALE "B" is still easier. Film rental representing 21%, theatre profit would represent 7%, and overhead the remaining 72%. 72 divided into 100 would produce a ratio of 1.389. Multiplying the known overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.389 will produce a gross unit of $108.34, or a weekly gross of $1,083.40. 21% of this gross would be a $227.51 weekly film rental, and one third of the film rental, or $75.84, would be the weekly theatre profit.

And let us see what would happen at that mythical 41% film rental under SLIDING SCALE "B." We know that the theatre profit will be one third of that or 13⅓%, and that the two will total 54⅔% of the gross. So overhead would be the remaining 45⅓% and divided into 100 equals a ratio of 2.206. Based on an overhead unit of $78.00, the gross unit would therefore need to be 2.206 times $78.00, or $172.07, or a weekly gross of $1,720.70. 41% would produce a $705.49 weekly film rental, and one third of that film rental, or $235.16, would be the weekly theatre profit. Total $1,720.65.

SLIDE "C"

Slide "C" produces the greatest variance, because it is actually a double slide, with both the film rental and the theatre profit as variables, that move one point at a time or two and one half points at a time. Under Slide A and B, only the film rentals were a slide and the theatre profits bore fixed percentage relationships to them. Under Slide C, when the film rental is 20% of the gross, the theatre profit is only 20% or one fifth of that film rental. As the film rental moves to 21%, the theatre profit moves to 21% of that film rental. And so on, up and up, so that at our mythical 41% film rental the theatre profit is 41% of that 41%. From this it can be seen that, from the standpoint of theatre profit, while Slide C minimizes profit on the small grossing pictures, it produces a better share than Slide B as soon as the film rental passes 33⅓%, but only equals Slide A at a film rental of 50%.

Applying our three hypothetical grosses, necessary to the earning of 20%, 21% and 41% film rentals, to SLIDING SCALE "C," we must re-emphasize that theatre profit is not a fixed percentage of such rentals. At a 20% film rental, the theatre profit would be 20% or one-fifth of that 20%, or 4%. Film rental and theatre profit would therefore total 24%, so that overhead would represent 76% of the necessary gross. 76 divided into 100 would equal a ratio of 1.316 under SLIDING SCALE "C." Multiplying the overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.316 would produce a gross unit of $102.65, or a weekly gross of $1,026.50. (Checked out: 20% of $1,026.50 equals a $205.30 film rental; 20% of that film rental equals a $41.06 theatre profit; and add these two to the overhead of $780.00 and you arrive at a gross week of $1,026.36).

To set up the gross under SLIDING SCALE "C," at which you would pay a 21% film rental, and earn 21% of that film rental (4.4%) as theatre profit, we can see that with these two representing 25.4% of the gross, overhead can only represent the remainder or 74.6%. Dividing 74.6 into 100 produces a ratio of 1.340. Multiplying the overhead unit of $78.00 by 1.340 would produce a gross unit of $104.52, or a weekly gross of $1,045.20. The 21% film rental would equal $219.49, and the 21% of such film rental that is theatre profit would equal $46.09.

Once again, with the big jump to a 41% film rental, the theatre profit would be 41% of the film rental or 16.8% of the gross, and combined they would total 57.8%, leaving only 42.2% of the gross as overhead. 42.2 divided into 100 would produce a ratio of 2.370 under SLIDING SCALE "C." Multiplying the overhead unit of $78.00 by 2.370 would produce a gross unit of $184.86, or a weekly gross of $1,848.60. (Checked out: 41% of $1,848.60 equals $757.93 of film rental; 41% of that film rental equals $310.75 theatre profit; and add these two to the overhead of $780.00, and you arrive at a gross week of $1,848.68).

These are the three common Slides, and just to draw a contrast of their effect on the three all-important results of:

(1) necessary gross; (2) film rental; and (3) theatre profit; we have prepared the special study (Fig. 1) of the three steps used here in explaining them.

A still further analysis would be to take the largest gross, always noted under SLIDING SCALE "A," and to re-work that gross under the methods of SLIDING SCALE "B" and SLIDING SCALE "C." The results would be as noted (Fig. 2).

This is a study of only three "steps," out of the thirty that exist between 20% and 50% in each of the three SLIDING SCALES, if the steps are 1% each. Based on any particular step, the ratio of overhead to gross are constant figures. We have only figured three of them here, and the other 27 will be given in succeeding "ROBOT" CHARTS. It will be necessary, however, for each theatremen to reduce his ratio figures to dollars per gross unit, by multiplying each by his overhead unit.

In each of the foregoing illustrations, the overhead unit was used in order to arrive at the gross unit, and for ease in calculations the orthodox seven-day-operation ten units were also used. Should it be necessary to assemble similar data on a nine unit small town or subsequent run situation, it is only necessary to divide overhead by ninths instead of tenths. And in a six-day-operation, where seven units represent the week, it is only necessary to divide overhead by sevenths instead of tenths. All other procedures, in arriving at a gross unit for a particular percentage, are followed as outlined; except that when the gross unit has been established it should be multiplied by ten, nine or seven, as the case may be, in order to arrive at the particular weekly gross.

6 "ROBOT" CHARTS... to Save Effort and Speed Use of SLIDING SCALES.

Anyone using a SLIDING SCALE, whether A, B, C, or some variation of these, certainly does not want to run a different set of computations on each play date. It is for this reason that the careful theatremen will take time out initially, to prepare his partnership grossing unit steps that will correspond to the particular percentage steps. To help him, we have assembled and checked certain ratio relationships on each of the three SLIDING SCALES discussed here. These are what might be termed "ROBOT" CHARTS (Chart No. 1; Chart No. 2; and Chart No. 3). To use them it is only necessary for any theatremen to multiply his audited and approved unit overhead by the ratio figure opposite each percentage step and to record the dollar result. As future playdates produce dollar unit grosses, it will then only be necessary for him to refer to his chart and note the nearest dollar gross and the film rental percentage that will therefore apply.

Under these three SLIDING SCALES "A," "B," and "C,"—honestly arrived at and honestly administered—there is fairness, non-discrimination, and a basic morality that will prevent many a law suit. Naturally a distributor who is trying to grab an inordinate share of the boxoffice dollar, or an exhibitor who is trying to build up a case of "triple-damages," will oppose it as a business method. But honestly audited, honestly administered, and honestly reported at the theatre level, there should be no honest intentioned industryite who will refuse to make the SLIDING SCALE formula a basis for FAIR FILM PRICING.

All of the foregoing has been submitted to several recognized industry leaders in advance of publication, and we will make an effort to carry a symposium of their views in an early issue. Following a close study of this published data, should any theatreman, or any distributor or producer, have views for or against this suggested formula, we will try to find the space to give them a fair airing. Or should there be specific problems or applications that theatremen would like to present, pertinent to this survey, we will try to answer, or get answers.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, its publisher and its staff, feel that a fair film pricing formula such as this could be the means of eliminating much of the ill will between buyer and seller, and a good part of the flood of law suits that are now pending and are being filed almost daily. This is not wishful thinking! It results from many conversations with theatre executives, and from off-the-record queries of skilled exchange men, who have been most helpful in contributing their experiences and suggestions.

OTHER PERCENTAGE FORMULAS . . .
And Their Weaknesses as FIXED Instruments.

In addition to the SLIDING SCALE method, there are dozens of variations of the STRAIGHT PERCENTAGE method; and it seems that every time a big picture is introduced some super-smart distribution executive will come up with some "gimmick" that has not previously been tried. As a matter of fact, some of these super-smart distribution executives seem to have no other claim to super-smartness than the dreaming up of such "gimmicks." And it is often the occasion for wry humor, when the supposedly big picture fails to perform boxoffice-wise as expected, and the smartly angled sales "gimmick" backfires, to the detriment of the distribution gross.

Percentage And No Review

When a high-priced picture is spotty or un-solid in its early and heavily backed runs this is often the occasion for a quick switch to some high straight-percentage-and-no-review (distributor participates in the gross from the first dollar, and no adjustment will be entertained even though the theatre does not recoup its overhead from its share) sales policy.

This latter is probably the toughest of all sales policies, and, other than some large, high-admissioned first run, in a large city, capable of grabbing a big gross, the theatre never existed that could operate day in and day out on such a policy, and show a profit. Of all pictures produced and distributed in any one year, the percentage of smash hits as related to goods, fairs, and flops, is very low. So the average theatre, stretching for many straight-percentage-and-no-review deals, will suffer such losses on the latter three categories that it will never be able to recoup on the few that really live up to their expectations.

Straight-percentage-and-no-review usually signals a picture in which the distributor or producer have no confidence. Sales policies are seldom nailed down until after test engagements prove the "want-to-see" or "don't-want-to-see" of the average paying patrons. Exceptional grosses in the test engagements, currently seem to signal a "roadshow" approach at 70-30-10% (70% film rental, 30% theatre share, with a minimum 10% of the gross guaranteed to the theatre as a profit); or even a 90-10-10% (90% film rental, 10% theatre share, with that 10% of the gross guaranteed to the theatre as a profit). In a restricted market, with a scarcity of strong features, many now receive the accolade of "roadshow" that aren't entitled to it, either by stature or grossing ability. Mediocre or spotty grosses in the test engagements, will usually result in an effort to have theatres pick up a share of the loss, through a 40% or 50% straight-percentage-and-no-review policy. A little clumsy, perhaps, but it has been made to work time and time again!

Percentage With Review

Another straight percentage method, that signals slightly more confidence in the grossing proclivities of the picture, but still not enough to let it set its own percentage return via SLIDING SCALE, is straight-percentage-with-a-promise-of-review. Much of the success of this latter method depends on the confidence that can be reposed in the promise of the local exchange manager. If not in writing as a part of the contract, it also depends on whether the district manager, or the home office, faced with a poor district or national gross, will back up the verbal promise of the branch manager, and not reverse him in spite of his personal honesty and good intentions. In some cases, producers or producers' representatives who have never seen the particular theatre or been in the particular territory, have been known to refuse to allow a review or adjustment even when promised by the top general sales manager of the distributing company.

A promise-of-review means nothing more or less than a promise to take another look at the deal after the picture has been played, and should the actual gross not warrant the percentage paid, to issue a partial credit. Many distributors require full payment at the contract price, before they will even discuss such an adjustment, so that they are in the position of having possession of all monies, and giving back only what they choose to give. Some such adjustments are made contingent on the theatre's purchase of other films that it may or may not want. And still others are held up for periods of months and years after their fairness has been arbitrated and admitted, before final credit is issued. In all cases, the theatreman dealing on a promise-of-review basis is more or less subject to the whim of the distributor, and most times he assumes the unhappy role of being an outright panhandler, "with his hat in his hand."

There is some question in our mind whether the purchase on a no-review basis isn't superior to the one on a promise-of-review basis. At least, in the former, you have a firm commitment covered by a contract, and put your business in jeopardy knowingly, and with your eyes open. In the latter, you very often lose not only dollars, but your self respect as well!

Percentage Variations

Percentage demands may also include a minimum playing time unit requirement, a participation in the cost of extra advertising, and, in the case of so-called pre-release or "roadshow" dates, a "suggestion" of increased admission scales. Normal percentages will range between 25% and 50%; but in certain territories where competition cannot be encouraged between large circuits and/or large buying groups, percentages are known to go as low as 15% for the top feature on a double feature bill, with "flat" prices and "off the top" payment for the second feature.

Guarantees of 10% of the gross as a theatre profit are a relatively recent development although even this has been shaved on some pictures by requiring that the theatre bear a proportionate share of the advertising out of its 10%. Another variation, still further cutting the theatre profit is to allow the theatre 10% of the net, after overhead has been deducted. And even this minor 10% of the gross or net, can be wiped out completely and a loss result, through a new "gimmick" that specifies: "in no case can the film rental be less than 40% (or even 50%, 60% or 70%) of the gross." In other words, under this clause, the theatre can have its 10% profit only if there is enough left to pay it, after a high percentage film rental has been paid. Quite a guarantee!

Unhealthy Results

Such are the highly controversial and ill will producing sales policies in this business today. Some part of the "billion dollars worth of law suits" that jam the courts can be attributed to them. And most all of the 5,000 to 6,000 theatres, that shuttered and were mostly converted to other types of businesses, can be attributed to them.

Fairminded men of exhibition, distribution and production, must attempt to find some basically fair film pricing formula that will allow this business to again forge ahead in proportion to the nation's population growth.

There is no national sales policy today; and in those territories where tough, high-percentage, confiscatory policies can be, and are being, enforced across the board, many honest and respected theatre-men in secondary runs are rebelling at paying the same percentage terms as the larger, higher admissioned, higher grossing runs ahead of them. They reason, and with some justification, that paying the same percentage of their gross they should get the same availability. Law suits result, and are won! But with each win, the entire clear-ance structure of this business, that made a lot of pictures available to the patron's choice on any one night, and that was one of our real advantages over the "single shot" nature of TV, is becoming chaotic. And no one will willingly back up and take a later date, unless the "staler bread" has a price advantage. Only a constantly decreasing film price and admission price, from the big city first runs to the last of the subsequent runs some months later, will prevent the costly law suits that will force day-and-date runs, if not given voluntarily; and will further dry up our weekly patronage through lack of available outlets.

Whether exhibitor, distributor or producer, let us put our house in order!

Don't forget, other than for the preponderantly seasonal drive-ins, new construction and major remodeling has been virtually at a standstill since 1946. Because mortgage funds have not been available for theatre construction, theatres did not keep in stride with other businesses in the modern march to the suburbs. Many of our downtown and neighborhood theatres are in obsolete areas, without being obsolete themselves. A huge amount of money was spent for the so-called new techniques, and, except for the large high-admissioned first runs that could recoup it out of one or two pictures, the vast majority of smaller theatres still owe it to themselves, or to their banks. In the meantime, day by day, obsolescence is taking its toll.

Both in number and in quality, many of the theatre outlets of our industry are in financial difficulties. And it has mainly been occasioned by too little of the gross having been left at these outlets, to provide for proper maintenance or new construction, during the very time when TV's faltering impact was felt.

The future of this business is in the hands of the men who will think—and do!

And, as Dore Schary so aptly put it some time ago: "May we always share honor together!"

UNITED ARTISTS . . . 1919 TO 1959

JUST THE OTHER DAY (April 8) there was a reference on this page to some 162 features that could be expected from each of nine domestic distribution sources between March 1, 1959, and Jan. 1, 1960. It may have come as a surprise to some industry observers to learn that UNITED ARTISTS led all the rest with a grand total of 32. And it may further surprise the same observers to learn that about 29 of the 32, or a minimum of seven in each quarter, will be top-budget, big-star, importantly-set, and specially merchandised ones. As we say, it may be a surprise, but if these observers have been tendin' to their knittin', and really paying attention to what has been going on, it shouldn't be.

This is the UNITED ARTISTS of 1959. This is the production-distribution company that only eight short years ago was limping along from day to day, and from management group to management group, without knowing where its next feature release was coming from. This is the UNITED ARTISTS, that under the inspired leadership of the Krim-Benjamin management team has emerged as the industry's top source of product for 1959; with implemented plans that stretch on and on into 1960 and 1961.

One of the most dramatic stories of modern American business success, this tremendous eight year growth was not the result of tricks or mirrors. There was plenty of concentrated hard work, long hours, flights from one end of the world to the other, and all bound together with a seriousness of intention and a will to succeed that overcame many obstacles. There was a careful selection, and a clever grouping together, of individual experts in their particular fields who had admiration for, and confidence in, one another. There was some luck, too! But, in the main, it was the kind of luck that stems from driving hard and making "the ball bounce" your way.

It took all of this and more to develop the internationally integrated, aggressive and fast moving organization that was capable of doing an $82,000,000 gross in 1958, with a sure forecast of topping that figure in 1959. Successes seem only to stimulate the UNITED ARTISTS' desire for more successes. Year after year, and marked by expansions into the fields of recorded music and TV production, the growth pattern accelerates.

Millions of dollars are plowed back into hard-hitting merchandising campaigns, and many a picture has been "made" to succeed, that might have failed with less dramatic and more timid methods. A 1959 advertising budget of over $9,500,000, and a world-wide field staff capable of turning the white heat of promotion on any engagement, anywhere, stands as a militant guarantee that UNITED ARTISTS' pictures will continue to be known by the ticket-buying public, and will continue to be successes at the world's theatres. Many an artist has taken a bow, and many will take bows in the future, for public acclaim and boxoffice successes that resulted from just such pin-pointed promotional effort.

So this is the UNITED ARTISTS of 1959, as differentiated from the UNITED ARTISTS of 1919 when the great and famous Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks founded it. Theirs was a company of box-office stars, and a glance at the UNITED ARTISTS' roster of today shows that in this department the management team has kept faith with its founders. But far deeper, and possibly more tangible, the current 1959 roots of UNITED ARTISTS are in the management and merchandising manpower that have been its "stars" of the past eight years. Men like Krim, Benjamin, Youngstein, Heineman, Picker, Golden, Lewis, Velde, et al.

It is to these men that MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, itself turned 40 last December, has dedicated this Special 40th Anniversary Tribute. May they continue to succeed and to expand. And, in doing so, may they continue to deliver an ever increasing supply of quality products to the theatres of the World.

Letters . . .

The letters from readers which appear on this page represent a cross-section of Theatre Executive opinion. Each has been received directly from the writer and his thoughts have not been prompted or doctored in any way.

From SEATTLE, WASH.

UNITED ARTISTS are a pair of favorite words around our buying and booking department.

While some film companies were cutting out their exploitation departments, and cutting down their national and local advertising, U. A. stepped theirs up. They made the public realize that motion pictures are really "Better Than Ever." Then to prove it positively, they had the "know how" of putting together real box office pictures, and it couldn't have happened at a nicer time for us exhibitors.

From almost nothing, U. A. in just a few years, has grown to one of the top distributors in our industry.

Doing business with this Company is a pleasure, due to two things. Many good "top" pictures and "top" realistic business men like Bill Heineman, Jim Velde, and right on down through their entire sales force.

I am joining exhibitors to wish them many years of success in bringing us more big box office hits.

WILL J. CONNER, President
John Hamrick Theatres, Inc.

From MISSION, KANS.

We feel that UNITED ARTISTS at the present time are the top distributors in the motion picture business. The quality and box-office value of the past year's releases has been a real life-saver for many exhibitors. The optimism, encouragement and cooperation we get from UNITED ARTISTS, is a great encouragement for us to continue doing our level best to sell motion picture entertainment to the public.

GLEN W. DICKINSON, JR.
Dickinson Theatres

From ATLANTA, GA.

On the occasion of the 40th Anniversary of UNITED ARTISTS, it is a pleasure to extend congratulations to them and particularly to Jim Velde and the new team who have made such a tremendous success during these past few years, which have been the most trying in the history of our industry.

Needless to say, UNITED ARTISTS' success, derived from many boxoffice hits, has also contributed greatly to the success, or should I say survival, of our company and other exhibitors throughout the country.

Here's hoping that the success of UNITED ARTISTS will continue uninterrupted and that their sales policies will be such as to permit production and exhibition to progress and prosper in proper ratio together.

JOHN H. STEMBLER, President
Georgia Theatre Company

From NEW YORK, N.Y.

UNITED ARTISTS is to be congratulated on its 40th Anniversary for its far-seeing management which has made promises and fulfilled them.

For the current year, UNITED ARTISTS has indicated that it would deliver feature releases estimated at $65 million and has set a minimum of seven important pictures for each quarter. This is a tremendous goal.

UNITED ARTISTS is truly the "hot" company and to coin a phrase, Some (exhibitors) Like It Hot!

HARRY BRANDT, President
Brandt Theatres

From DALLAS, TEX.

I am delighted to take this opportunity to express my deep appreciation for the fantastically wonderful job that has been accomplished by the present executive and sales staffs of UNITED ARTISTS, since taking over the management just a few short years ago.

It is one thing to operate a going concern—but it takes great integrity, inspirational ability, intestinal fortitude, blood, sweat and tears to revive an organization that has been on the down-hill side for quite some time, and these showmen have accomplished more than that. Their sales staff headed by Bill Heineman, Jim Velde, Milt Cohen, and Sid Cooper have worked very closely with our Interstate Circuit and Texas Consolidated Theatres and have always extended the hand of friendship, understanding, and cooperation.

Naturally, this great achievement could only have been accomplished by the ability of Arthur Krim, Bob Benjamin, and Max Youngstein, and by their showmanship ability to pick out, select, and arrange for the production of great and outstanding boxoffice blockbuster attractions.

It once again proves that it takes young blood, youth, and experience to accomplish what might otherwise seem to have been impossible.

R. J. O'DONNELL, General Manager
Interstate Circuit, Inc.

From NEW YORK, N.Y.

Theatre Owners of America is happy to join with the entire industry in congratulating UNITED ARTISTS not only on its 40th Anniversary, but particularly for the tremendous progress of the last few years which has placed it in the foreground among distributors. For exhibitors, may we extend best wishes for many more years of successful operation so that UNITED ARTISTS may prosper and continue as a prime source of badly needed product. UNITED ARTISTS' new executive team may be proud of its achievements—may it continue to provide the same energetic and enthusiastic leadership for our industry.

GEORGE G. KERASOTES, President
Theatre Owners of America

From LOS ANGELES, CAL.

I am very grateful to UNITED ARTISTS for both quality and quantity of pictures they have delivered to our theatres in the past year. Such pictures as VIKINGS, GOD'S LITTLE ACRE, KINGS GO FORTH, DEFIANT ONES, and I WANT TO LIVE contributed very heavily to the successful operation of our theatres, and some of our highest grosses were achieved on UNITED ARTISTS pictures. In addition, the fact that UNITED ARTISTS has distributed pictures in quantity has been of immeasurable help to us in booking our theatres.

In addition to delivering fine product I feel that UNITED ARTISTS has backed up each picture with ample coverage in the newspapers, as well as radio and television. This hard selling has contributed greatly to the success of many UNITED ARTISTS pictures in our theatres.

Our relationship with the UNITED ARTISTS sales organization has been excellent. We have found their sales policies to be fair and equitable and have found their entire sales organization to be considerate of the exhibitor's problems.

We are eagerly looking forward to the exhibition in some of our theatres of such great box office pictures as SOME LIKE IT HOT, AROUND THE WORLD IN 80 DAYS, HORSE SOLDIERS, and HOLE IN THE HEAD.

It is my fervent wish that our theatres shall continue to be able to exhibit UNITED ARTISTS pictures for many, many years to come.

WILLIAM R. FORMAN
Pacific Drive-In Theatres Corp.

From LOS ANGELES, CAL.

For the production of top-bracket attractions and a program of outstanding showmanship, M. A. (Pete) Lundgren and all of us in National Theatres extend our heartiest congratulations on UNITED ARTISTS' 40th Anniversary.

We hope to enjoy the same fine relationship for another 40 years.

With best wishes to everyone in UNITED ARTISTS' fine organization.

M. SPENCER LEVE, Vice-President
National Theatres Amusement Co.

From BALTIMORE, MD.

Superb leadership, ability to obtain motion picture stars, imaginative advertising, courageous merchandising, willingness to gamble, taking advantage of every opportunity, progressive thinking, far reaching plans, and the ever present thought of tomorrow—this is the combination that has brought success to UNITED ARTISTS in a very short period of time. To exhibitors this combination means a very comfortable feeling of confidence in knowing that the future holds a constant flow of quality product from this enthusiastic and progressive company.

With such inspired leadership the future holds a success story that will far surpass the last five years for UNITED ARTISTS.

JACK FRUCHTMAN
Fruchtman Theatres

From JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

"Believing in what you are selling and doing something about it" is what you think of when you think of U. A.

They have had some excellent pictures . . . sold them well . . . and done some fine business.

It is a pleasure to deal with U. A.

Here's to 40 more productive years.

LOUIS J. FINSKE
Florida State Theatres, Inc.

EDITOR'S NOTE: From one end of the country to the other, and without even mentioning Canada, Latin America and Foreign, letters like these flowed in. We are only sorry that one page could not accommodate more than the above cross-section. We hope those theatre executives whose letters do not appear, will let the above speak for them. The originals of all letters have been directed to the executives of UNITED ARTISTS for their most cherished permanent files.

Anniversary Trailer Aids UA Celebration

NEW YORK—United Artists has produced a special Fortieth Anniversary trailer as part of the year-long celebration commemorating the founding of the company on April 17, 1919.

The six-minute trailer features scenes from UA's roster of boxoffice attractions set for release in 1959. Produced in color and in black and white, the trailer will be shown in theatres and also to exhibitors, circuit heads and film buyers in UA's 33 U.S. and Canadian exchange areas. Distribution will be handled by National Screen Service.

The trailer is one of the key elements of an all-media promotion campaign for the Fortieth Anniversary celebration. UA has already sent out an elaborate 40th Anniversary kit to motion picture editors, film reviewers and film trade editors throughout the U.S. and overseas.

"Anniversary" Preps In N.Y.

NEW YORK—Rehearsals begin in New York April 15 on the film version of "Anniversary Waltz" to be produced for United Artists release starring Academy Award-winner David Niven and Mitzi Gaynor.

Joseph Fields will produce and David Miller will direct from a screenplay by Fields. The script is based on the hit play written by Fields and Jerome Chodorov which ran 615 performances on Broadway, 58 weeks in San Francisco, and enjoyed other long-run engagements throughout the world.

The film will be shot at Fox Studios on 54th Street and on locations throughout the city. George Justin is associate producer.

"Anniversary Waltz" is a saucy comedy of a marital mixup with hilarious, risqué situations involving an entire family, including in-laws and children.

Poe Reps For "Hole"

NEW YORK — Seymour Poe has been named producer's representative for United Artists' "A Hole in the Head." The Sincap production, starring Frank Sinatra, Edward G. Robinson and Carolyn Jones, was produced and directed by Frank Capra.

Some recent St. Louis promotions for UA's "Some Like It Hot" at Loew's State were, left, models playing "ukes" and attired as flappers who toured busy areas of the city and called on disc jockeys plugging the UA Records from the film. Several of the models and St. Louis' "Marilyn Monroe" are seen, left, calling upon Robert McDowell, president, Ludwig Music Shops, while, right, the UA Records album from the film is seen being plugged by Bob Hyland, general manager, CBS-KMOX, and chief barker, at a Variety Club meeting for the formation of a Ladies Auxiliary and attended by 300 guests. The album was given away as a door prize.

UA Looks Ahead To Biggest Year

Eight Successive Years Of Expansion, Rising Profits To Continue As '59 Product Investment Tops $65 Million

NEW YORK—In a season when the film business has had more than its share of problems and trials, United Artists stands alone as the Cinderella corporation of the movie world.

As other companies have retrenched, retreated or simply marked time in the face of a changing market, United Artists has registered eight successive years of expansion, development, and soaring profits after a long period of losses under earlier managements.

Today, on the threshold of its Fortieth Anniversary celebration, UA can accurately be called the motion picture industry's foremost source of quality features. For 1959 alone the company is investing a record sum of more than $65,000,000 in production. In terms of stars, properties and production values, the lineup for the year matches the very best that the industry has ever seen.

Through the success of its special formula for financing and releasing independently-made films, United Artists now has multiple commitments with more than 60 of the industry's ablest producers and star-producers. Over 100 first-line stars are currently represented on its product roster. With independent production now accounting for the major portion of Hollywood's output, UA's continuing relationships with independent creative artists are unapproached by any other film company.

Underscoring United Artists' extraordinary success story is its world revenue for 1958, estimated at well over $80,000,000. This is the biggest gross in the organization's 40-year history. On the basis of the outstanding new release program, profits and revenue are confidently expected to continue upward in 1959.

The following tabulation of global gross and net illustrates UA's growth since the company was taken over by the Arthur B. Krim-Robert S. Benjamin management team in 1951.

"Gunfight" Saturation Set

NEW YORK — "The Gunfight At Dodge City," United Artists' western drama about the legendary Bat Masterson, has been set to open in over 75 cities in the Kansas-Missouri area starting May 13. The saturation booking is focused on Dodge City itself where Masterson served as sheriff in the last years of the 19th Century.

Starring Joel McCrea and filmed in Cinema-Scope and Color by Deluxe, "The Gunfight At Dodge City" is a Mirisch Company presentation directed by Joseph M. Newman from a screenplay by Daniel B. Ullman and Martin M. Goldsmith. Walter M. Mirisch produced.

Roger H. Lewis, left, national director of advertising, publicity, and exploitation for United Artists, recently accepted the Foreign Language Press Film Critics' Circle award in New York naming "The Defiant Ones" as the best motion picture of 1958. Making the presentation is Sigmund Gottlob, executive chairman of the Association.

Marilyn Monroe Fans Take Over Broadway

NEW YORK—Some 15,000 howling Marilyn Monroe fans bowled over policemen, splintered barricades, and took undisputed possession of Seventh Avenue between 45th and 46th Streets as Marilyn attended the recent premiere of United Artists' "Some Like It Hot" at the new Loew's State Theatre.

The boiling street crowd of MM devotees was described by police officials as the largest and most avid ever to watch the premiere of a film in New York. The chanting, swaying, groaning throng blocked all traffic from Seventh Avenue and caused a jam that backed up cars and taxis for almost two miles. One innocent victim of the "Some Like It Hot" excitement was the Seventh Avenue bus line, which was forced to abandon its franchised route and pioneer a new course through Times Square.

Police reserves were summoned but had no more luck than the original premiere detachment in imposing sweetness and calm on Marilyn's 15,000 friends. The cold weather and a raw wind were equally ineffectual in dampening the ardor of the premiere watchers who sustained a one-hour chant of, "We Want Marilyn!"

Young Blood

NEW YORK—The average age of the miracle boys—the present owner-managers of United Artists, who pulled the company up by its bootstraps from near bankruptcy to robust solvency, is 45 years and seven months. This means that they were born approximately five years before the corporate birth of United Artists on April 17, 1919.

Preening themselves with pardonable pride for the company's 40th anniversary celebration are the young bosses—Arthur B. Krim, Robert S. Benjamin, William J. Heinemann, Max E. Youngstein, Arnold Picker, Seymour Peyser, Charles Smadja, Robert Blumofe, and Herbert L. Golden.

Film Council Delegates See "Hole In Head"

PHILADELPHIA — More than 600 women, invited guests and delegates to the annual conference of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils, attended a special screening of "A Hole in the Head," produced and directed by Frank Capra for United Artists release, at the Arcadia Theatre, Philadelphia, last week.

Capra received a special award at the organization's Anniversary Awards Banquet in the Warwick Hotel. The award was presented to him by Mrs. Dean Gray Edwards, president of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils.

The citation reads as follows: "Special award presented by the Federation of Motion Picture Councils, Inc. to Frank Capra, producer, director, craftsman and citizen for his remarkable record of distinguished films and for his many years of devoted service to the motion picture industry and to his adopted country."

Following the screening of "A Hole in the Head," Sincap production starring Frank Sinatra, Edward G. Robinson and Carolyn Jones, the noted film maker discussed the problems of producing and directing films with representatives of leading women's groups who are delegates and members of the Federation.

Mrs. Margaret G. Twyman, director of community relations for the MPA, served as coordinator of the 1959 conference of Motion Picture Councils.

The convention brought together representatives of film groups from all over the nation. Delegates discussed industry problems and ways to increase public attention to motion pictures. Many film executives, representing all phases of the industry were on hand as speakers and discussion leaders.

Youngstein Honored

NEW YORK—More than 200 industry leaders, the largest turnout in the history of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, attended that organization's luncheon this week in the Georgian Room of the Hotel Piccadilly, it was announced by Bob Montgomery, AMPA president. United Artists vice-president Max E. Youngstein was the guest of honor. Arthur Mayer introduced Youngstein, who delivered the key address.

United Artists executives who were dais guests at the annual function included Arthur B. Krim, president; Robert S. Benjamin, chairman of the board; William J. Heinemann, vice-president in charge of distribution; Arnold M. Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution; Seymour M. Peyser, vice-president and general counsel; Herbert L. Golden, vice-president in charge of operations, and James R. Velde, general sales manager.

United Artists' promotion department was represented on the dais by Roger H. Lewis, national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation; Fred Goldberg, executive assistant to Lewis; Mort Nathanson, publicity manager; Joe Gould, advertising manager; and Mori Krushen, exploitation manager.

According to Hans Barnstyn, AMPA treasurer, the mail and telephone reservations have exceeded those of other years by a considerable margin.

History Lesson . . . UA Style

THE UNITED ARTISTS Corporation, which celebrates its 40th Anniversary during 1959, was formed on April 17, 1919, by Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, and D. W. Griffith as founders and co-owners.

The guiding principles of the new company, as set forth in the Articles of Incorporation, were "to improve the photoplay industry and its artistic standards, and the methods of marketing photoplays," and to "market photoplays in the interests of the artists who create them."

The details of incorporation were plotted and drawn up by William Gibbs McAdoo, President Woodrow Wilson's Secretary of the Treasury, whose services were subsequently retained as general counsel. Oscar Price, who had been chief publicist for the Treasury Department in the wartime Liberty Loan Drive, was elected as first president of the corporation. McAdoo, Price, and the four owners had enjoyed a felicitous association during the loan drive, when Miss Pickford and Chaplin, Fairbanks, and Griffith had stumped the country in a glamorous, high-powered—and notably successful—attempt to sell bonds to the populace.

On May 20, 1919, the directors approved a contract for the services of Hiram Abrams as general manager. Abrams, a well-known industry figure, 13 months later assumed the presidency of United Artists and held the position to the time of his death in 1926. The company rented offices in New York at 729 Seventh Avenue, which have since been considerably expanded.

Fairbanks Pic Was First

The first picture to bear the legend "released through United Artists" was Douglas Fairbanks' "His Majesty, the American." The world premiere was held on Oct. 24, 1919, at the Capitol, New York. The event had a double significance; it also marked the debut of Broadway's newest, and at that time, most luxurious movie palace.

"His Majesty, the American" got the new company off to a fast start. Mary Pickford's first United Artists release was "Pollyanna"

(January, 1920) and it was followed shortly by D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," which starred Lillian Gish and a new discovery named Richard Barthelmess. Chaplin contributed his first picture to United Artists in 1923: "Woman of Paris," which he wrote, produced, and directed, but in which he did not appear.

On the business side of the corporation's affairs, Abrams deviated from the then accepted policy of selling pictures on the basis of a flat fee paid by the theatre and inaugurated selling on a percentage basis. "Pollyanna" was the first film to be handled in this manner.

More Indies Join

Another departure, and a more significant one, was forced upon the directors of the company by existing market conditions. Since the owners knew that the quality of their own pictures must inevitably suffer if they attempted to make them in quantity merely to fill the various needs of theatres, they turned to their only practical alternative. Various independent producers were invited to release their pictures through United Artists.

United Artists, in that period, released such pictures as "I Accuse," a powerful drama based on the Dreyfus case; Abel Seach's "Iron Trail," Ibsen's "A Doll House," starring Alla Nazimova and Alan Hale; "Paddy the Next Best Thing," starring Mae Marsh; and "Beloved Rogue," with John Barrymore as the poet-thief Francois Villon; "Son of the Sheik," starring Rudolph Valentino; Buster Keaton's "The General"; "Tumbleweeds," with William S. Hart; and many others of similar high calibre.

This was the cream of the movie crop. And, when the films of Fairbanks, Griffith, Miss Pickford and Chaplin were added to it, the array was dazzling. No other company of the period could hope to equal it. The United Artists owners were highly productive and at the height of their creative powers and popularity. Griffith made "Orphans of the Storm," starring Lillian and Dorothy Gish,

Healthy Record, TV Offspring Join Parent Firm Marking Anniversary

NEW YORK—As United Artists prepares to celebrate its 40th anniversary as a corporate entity today (April 17), it is justifiably enthusiastic about its future. Not only has UA broadened its basic film activities, but it has plunged boldly ahead into the fields of music, records and television, in line with its policy of becoming a major factor in the entire diversified area of entertainment.

Although these enterprises are still chronological infants, they are flourishing and profitable as United Artists begins its fifth decade.

With specific reference to television, UA's video operations are composed of two segments:

1) The sale of its own theatrical motion pictures for showing on television stations throughout the country, and the similar sale of such other pictures as it may acquire, and

2) The financing, production and distribution of films made especially for television.

The first category includes the release to television stations not only of hundreds of United Artists' own pictures previously shown in theatres, but also of a group of features and shorts the company acquired when it acquired the assets of Associated Artists Production Corp., a major coup in a fiercely competitive arena, and a prime example of the company's enterprising policy of expansion.

The AAP acquisition consists of 800 sound and 200 silent pictures comprising Warner Brothers pre-1950 film library, and some 2,000 short subjects and cartoons, including the popular "Popeye" series.

In the field of original TV film production, United Artists Television is borrowing a leaf from the book of its parent company. As United Artists films provide financing, distribution and promotion of the pictures made by its independent producers, so the television company is operating along the same lines, permitting free creative rein untrammelled by front-office meddling or "supervision."

Five television series are already in work under the aegis of United Artists Television, each consisting of 39 half-hour filmed segments. They are "The Dennis O'Keefe Show,"—a Cypress Production starring Dennis O'Keefe; "The Troubleshooters,"—a Northstar Pictures Production starring Keenan Wynn and co-starring Bob Mathias; "Hudson's Bay"—a Northstar Pictures Production starring Barry Nelson; "Tales of the Vikings,"—a Brynaprod, S.A. Production, starring Jerome Courtland with Buddy Baer; and "International Airport,"—a Himan Brown Production starring Lee Bowman.

While United Artists celebrates the 40th Anniversary of its founding with special events in theatres throughout the world, its bright television offspring will be very much in evidence on the airwaves of the nation.

UA On Wax

And UA is still growing.

United Artists' venture into the world of music, like its foray into TV, is flourishing.

UA's record-making debut represented more than an opportunity to branch out into another area of the entertainment field. A preliminary study of the record industry revealed that, although the public was not suffering from a lack of recordings, the range and quality of the general product left important areas for an imaginatively operated company to fill. To organize a company capable of producing this type of record became the goal of Max E. Youngstein, a vice-president of the film company. The machinery was set into motion when Youngstein was named president of United Artists Records (in addition to his film duties) and assembled an operating team of diversely talented and experienced music and record people.

Heading the hard-working group are Monte Kay, vice-president and general manager, and Kay Norton, administrative vice-president. Their associates include Lester Lees, national sales and promotion manager; Jack Lewis, director of artists and repertoire; and Bob Altshuler, director of advertising and publicity.

By the end of 1958, one year after getting under way, United Artists Records was hitting its stride.

As an illustration, a close collaboration between the record company and the producers of "I Want To Live!" resulted in one of the most successful motion picture sound-track albums in film history. Simultaneous release of the film and the sound-track launched an unprecedented cross-promotion campaign that utilized the resources of both companies. The enthusiastic reception that greeted the albums increased theatre boxoffice receipts, while exhibition of the film boosted record sales.

By adapting a production technique perfected by the parent film company, UA Records is stimulating fresh album ideas and converting them into exciting new platters.

and "Sally of the Sawdust," starring W. C. Fields and Marilyn Miller, among others. Miss Pickford's films included "Tess of the Storm Country," "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," and "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Fairbanks' pictures included "Robin Hood," "The Three Musketeers," "The Thief of Bagdad," and "The Gaucho."

Over the years, Chaplin's films for United Artists were: "Woman of Paris" (1923), "The Gold Rush" (1925), "The Circus" (1928), "City Lights" (1931), "Modern Times" (1936), "The Great Dictator" (1940), "Monsieur Verdoux" (1947), and "Limelight" (1953). Chaplin wrote, produced and directed all of them. He starred in all except "Woman of Paris."

Others Buy Into UA

The first radical change in the corporate, as distinct from the distributive setup of United Artists took place on Dec. 5, 1924, when Joseph M. Schenck was allowed to buy into the company and become an owner-member. Schenck was elected chairman of the board of directors. He brought into the fold the pictures of such figures as Samuel Goldwyn, Norma Talmadge, John Barrymore, Gloria Swanson, and Corinne Griffith.

Goldwyn himself was the second new member-owner of United Artists. Prior to his election on Oct. 13, 1927, he had already contributed to the United Artists roster such films as "Stella Dallas" (starring Belle Bennett) and "The Winning of Barbara Worth" (which introduced Gary Cooper). Shortly afterwards, Gloria Swanson also joined the company as a producer-owner.

This added strength reflected itself qualitatively and quantitatively in the release schedule of United Artists in the next few years leading up to and including the early days of the depression. Hollywood's foremost directors and stars were listed on the United Artists roster.

Among United Artists pictures were memorable ones, including Gloria Swanson's "Sadie Thompson," Ronald Colman's "Bulldog Drummond," "Whoopie" (Eddie Cantor), "Abraham Lincoln" (Walter Huston), "Hell's Angels" (Jean Harlow's first movie of consequence), and "The Front Page."

New Blood Sought

In the Thirties, the changing shape of the film industry—the economic pattern imposed by the depression and the introduction of the double feature; the death, retirement, or decreasing activities of the original founders; the fading of old stars and the emergence of new ones—all those factors dictated an expansion of activity for United Artists, a reaching out for new blood. New producers, new stars, new directors were sought—but always with the underlying emphasis on quality.

In 1932, Walt Disney started releasing his cartoons through United Artists, and Edward Small and Harry M. Goetz (under the corporate title of Reliance Films) added their pictures to the company's schedule. In 1933, two major producing units were added—Alexander Korda's London Films (the first contribution was the memorable "King Henry VIII," starring Charles Laughton) and Twentieth Century Pictures, formed by Joseph Schenck and Darryl Zanuck. In 1935, David O. Selznick joined as a producer, bringing into the fold in the next few years such pictures as "A Star is Born," "The Prisoner of Zenda," and "Nothing Sacred."

Korda was the next producer to be elected to ownership. This took place on June 5, 1935, and marked the first investment of British capital in an American firm.

United Artists' pictures of the Thirties included such as "Street Scene," "The Greeks Had a Word For It," "Arrowsmith," "Scarface," "I Cover the Waterfront," "Les Misérables," "Modern Times," "Dead End," "Dodsworth," "Wuthering Heights," and "Our Town."

By 1945, only two of the original founders of the company remained—Chaplin and Miss Pickford, and only the former was active in production. Griffith had retired in 1933. Fairbanks had died in 1939. Schenck had withdrawn to form his own distributing company, Twentieth Century-Fox; Goldwyn withdrew; Korda withdrew; Selznick, who had been elected a partner in the late Thirties, also resigned and went elsewhere. The problem of product to justify the overhead of the vast United Artists domestic and international organization, always a knotty one, became acute.

Nevertheless, in the Forties there were always enough good pictures; enough fine directors and noted stars to fill out the production roster. There were such pictures as Shaw's "Major Barbara," "In Which We Serve," "The Story of G.I. Joe," "Caesar and Cleopatra," "Red River," "Since You Went Away," and "Spellbound," the latter three being among the biggest moneymakers in the company's history up to that time.

Prosperity Bubble Bursts

But from then on, with the bursting of the bubble of war prosperity, and in an industry increasingly plagued by problems of economy, jaded public taste, and the spectre of television, United Artists slipped sharply downward. Despite an occasional picture in the best United Artists tradition ("Body and Soul," Olivier's "Henry V," Stanley Kramer's "Champion" and "Home of the Brave") the company was dogged by the bogey of insufficient and inadequate product.

In the next few years a succession of stewardships labored valiantly but in vain to stem the downward turn. There was rumor that the company would merge, was bankrupt, would dissolve. The rumors were untrue. Miss Pickford and Chaplin, who between them controlled the corporation, had staunch faith in the organization that had been built up painstakingly over the years, and no intention of merging, dissolving, or in any way blurring or losing its identity. But they did not deny that the situation was critical.

years these pictures include Douglas Fairbanks' "His Majesty, The American," Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna," Chaplin's "Woman Of Paris," and D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms." UA officials say, with modest pride, "We make 'em to last!" It was "His Majesty, The American," starring Fairbanks, that opened the doors of the then astonishingly opulent Capitol on Broadway. It was the first release of the brand new movie company back in 1919. UA was also the first movie company to release a successful feature picture in color. This was Fairbanks' "The Black Pirate," back in 1926, and it started the public clamor for Technicolor.

WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO, Secretary of the Treasury in President Wilson's wartime cabinet, was the first general counsel of United Artists. He met the founders of the company during the great Liberty Bond Drive of World War One, in which the four movie figures stumped the country on behalf of the Drive; and he drew up the original articles of incorporation 40 years ago.

MERRY CHRISTMAS ITEM: From the minutes of United Artists, November, 1919, the year the company was founded: "Resolved, that the action of the President in distributing $675 in gold to employees . . . at Christmas time is approved." Don't forget that in those days the employees didn't have to pay any income tax, and the dollar was the 100 cent variety.

Artists, a group of young industry executives made representations to Miss Pickford and Chaplin for management of the company. On Feb. 15, 1951, provisional management control passed into their hands.

The new group was headed by Arthur B. Krim, Robert S. Benjamin, William J. Heineman, Max E. Youngstein, Arnold M. Picker, and Seymour M. Peyser. These men were taking over—in the midst of an industry-wide climate of uncertainty, confusion and extreme pessimism—a company which had been staggering for five years, whose prestige and glory was all in the past.

Officers were named: Krim to be president; Benjamin, his associate in the law firm of Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin, and Krim, to be chairman of the board; Heineman, vice-president in charge of distribution; Youngstein, vice-president with supervision over advertising, publicity, and exploitation; and Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution. (Since then Youngstein has turned over his promotional activities to the company's national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation, Roger H. Lewis, and is now deeply involved with corporate and production operations). Peyser is vice-president and general counsel. In Paris, Charles Smadja represents U.A. as vice-president in charge of European Productions.

The new team tackled the first problem first—the acquisition of pictures to release. This immediate end was accomplished almost at once by purchase of all pictures then in release or about to be released by Eagle-Lion Classics, Inc., which was going out of business. In the first few months of the new regime, three films acquired from various sources—"He Ran All The Way," "Fabiola," and "Cyrano de Bergerac"—grossed well over a million dollars. This in an organization which, for 12 solid months previously, had not released a single picture!

Back To Black Ink

In something under six months, the color of the ink in the accounting department's pens had turned from red to black. And, by the end of the year, United Artists had completed its first profitable calendar year since 1946. The impossible had happened. The "wise money" was astounded; the industry as a whole took heart from the achievement.

As a result of this phenomenal showing, the conditions of management venture were met, and the new regime became owners of 8,000 shares of United Artists stock, with a 10-year voting control over the remaining shares, owned equally by Chaplin and Miss Pickford.

In February, 1955, United Artists acquired Chaplin's 25 per cent interest, and in February, 1956, UA took over Miss Pickford's block of shares, giving the new management group 100 per cent control of the company.

On April 25, 1957, United Artists ended its status as the last of the privately owned major motion picture companies when $17,000,000 of debentures and common stock was offered to the public by a nationwide group of 99 underwriters headed by F. Eberstadt & Co. This public offering, which was immediately oversubscribed, consisted of $10,000,000 of six per cent convertible subordinated debentures, due May 1, 1969, and 350,000 shares of common stock.

Of the common shares, 250,000 shares were sold for the company's account and the remaining 100,000 shares for the account of the management group headed by Benjamin and Krim. This new management team continues to own a majority control of United Artists stock.

At the company's first stockholders' meeting on June 4, 1957, United Artists board of directors, consisting of the following members, was reelected, along with the company's officers.

The board members were Benjamin, Krim, Heineman, Youngstein, Picker, Peyser, Leon Goldberg, vice-president and treasurer; Seward I. Benjamin, secretary; Joseph Ende, controller and assistant treasurer; Robert W. Dowling, City Investing Company; and Robert C. Porter, F. Eberstadt & Co. (Herbert L. Golden was named as a member of the Board on Jan. 1, 1958, when he was appointed vice-president in charge of operations).

Bernie Youngstein had a publicity screening of "Some Like It Hot" for special movie critics, disc jockies, and TV editors, which was also attended by some of the sales department and a number of circuit people in the area. Enthusiasm for the picture has been excellent. The sales department is confident that 1959 is a "Banner Year" in United Artists history and everyone is working with a tremendous amount of enthusiasm and a lot of respect for the pictures. The booking department joins the sales department in acclaiming this as the greatest line up of pictures we have ever had, and they are conveying this message to every one they book.

BOSTON

The grosses of $7,924 on Saturday, March 28, and $8,791 on Sunday, March 29, in the Loew's Orpheum, Boston, broke all records on any United Artists picture which played in any theatre in Boston. This includes "Around The World In 80 Days." . . . On Wednesday, April 8, "I Want To Live" opened in 27 first-sub run conventional and drive-in theatres. This is the greatest number of theatres to play any United Artists picture on a first-sub run break. . . . The Boston territory premier on "The Naked Maja" will take place in the Gary, Boston, on or about May 28. . . . The Boston territory premier on "Lonelyhearts" will take place the latter part of April in the Kenmore, Boston. . . . "The Last Mile" just concluded a week's engagement in the Pilgrim, Boston, to a very satisfactory gross.

CINCINNATI

"Some Like It Hot" has been awarded to the State Theatre in Charleston, W. Va., on a bid and opened there on March 25 for an extended run. The picture has also been awarded to the Circle 25 Drive-In, Lexington, Ky., on a bid. . . . "Some Like It Hot" is also holding over at the Broad, Columbus, Ohio, and was set to open at the Albee, Cincinnati, on April 9. Lots of talk on this one. . . . "Defiant Ones" opened first-run Cincinnati April 1, day and date at the Twin Drive-In and downtown Keiths for an extended run. . . . Virtually all of the drive-ins in this territory have already made deals with United Artists now that they are getting started again this year. . . . Frank Carnahan and Bud Hughes were in town to book their drive-ins and booked United Artists product solid during United Artists Week. All United Artists salesmen are concentrating on June 28 to July 11. . . . Other visitors in Cincinnati were Lou Sher of Columbus, Zeke Pappas of Dayton, Jerry Shinbach from Chicago, and Charles Sugarman, who just took over the Muir and Starlite Drive-Ins, Parkersburg, W. Va. from Frank Yassenoff. . . . The Peoples Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, is opening under the new management of Bob Epps, who also operates the Classic Theatre, Dayton. . . . "Alias Jesse James" now set at Keiths, Cincinnati, the latter part of April. . . . "Naked Maja" set at the Palace, Cincinnati, opening April 22. . . . Bill Gandall, United Artists publicist in town, is working on "Some Like It Hot" and "Naked Maja."

JACKSONVILLE

The Jacksonville United Artists branch is elated over having placed first in the first lap of the current sales drive. . . . An additional booker is being added to the staff. . . . A new cashier, Mrs. Mary Newport, is replacing Mrs. Kay Dilena, who moves to the sales department as branch manager's secretary upon the resignation of Mrs. Laura Kenny.

NEW HAVEN

"Some Like It Hot" opened up at the Roger Sherman, New Haven, March 25, and on March 26 at the Poli Theatres, in Waterbury, Bridgeport, and Hartford. In spite of the worst weather we have had in a spring, and snow on Friday, the picture gave an outstanding account of itself. One of the most significant factors was the excellent business each theatre reported on Monday, March 30. We had unusual tie-ups with this picture and got splendid coverage in all instances, inasmuch as it was Marilyn Monroe's first picture in some time. . . . The majority of drive-ins opened on March 13, but unfortunately were snowed out. We also had a very bad break again, for the week-ending of March 27 through 29. "Separate Tables" played to a very fine gross at the College, New Haven, for five weeks, and also three weeks at the Poli, Bridgeport. . . . UA's sales policy was greeted in most instances by the exhibitors as a definite step forward. They feel that where the pictures are sold properly, there should be no trouble in securing payment. . . . "Alias Jesse James" was screened and the comments were excellent. The first engagement will be at the Poli, New Haven, to open April 10. The exhibitors feel that grosses should be in line with the better Bob Hope pictures.

PITTSBURGH

Dave Williams and Ed Hayes, UA staffers in the Atlanta office, wish each other good luck as Williams leaves the motion picture industry after 30 years service.

James Hendel's secretary, Mrs. Eve Elman, vacationed in New York City and Atlantic City. . . . A luncheon will be held Monday, April 20, at the Park Schenley Restaurant as a testimonial to James Hendel and the UA branch manager John A. Zomnir. . . . Enthusiasm in the entire office is running very high due to the phenomenal business of "Some Like It Hot," now playing first-run Pittsburgh.

SALT LAKE CITY

United Artists' "Alias Jesse James" opened first-run Salt Lake City day and date in the Lyric Theatre, Hyland Drive-In, and Redwood Drive-In to excellent business on Wednesday, March 25. This was the opening picture of the 1959 season in the two drive-ins. . . . At a recent special screening of "Some Like It Hot," the picture received an enthusiastic and hilarious response from an audience that was "rolling in the aisles" during practically all of the two hours running time. This picture is set for a three theatre engagement opening in Salt Lake on May 6 for an extended run. . . . United Artists' branch manager, W. W. McKendrick, is now a proud "grandpappy"—his daughter, Robyn, and son-in-law, Don, aided and abetted the stork in presenting him and Mrs. McKendrick with a 6 lb. 14 oz. grandson. . . . Dick Stafford, formerly with Paramount and Rank in Salt Lake City, has joined United Artists as sales-

A Real Good Tenant

NEW YORK—In 1919, when the company was founded, United Artists leased offices at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City. Now, four decades later, the company, which is celebrating its 40th anniversary, is still doing business at the same stand.

man in the San Francisco exchange, and Dick has already bade all of his many friends in Salt Lake good-bye. Everyone wishes him well in his new location. . . . Two attractive young ladies have joined United Artists' Salt Lake staff in the persons of Annette Whitmore as billing clerk and June Duncan as assistant cashier. . . . United Artists' local office is expected to undergo some remodeling and be equipped with new furniture to better serve the exhibitors of the Intermountain West.

Before Krim and Benjamin assumed control of United Artists in 1951, the company had sustained substantial losses in 1948, 1949, and 1950. Since then, gross income increased from $20,136,829 for 1951 to $70,008,242 for 1957, with net earnings for the same period rising from $313,398 to $3,262,466, a UA high.

Top Producers Join

The new management's pulling the firm out of the red in so short a time proved to be a highly attractive recommendation, and top-flight independent producers were quick to join.

While the company's main efforts continue to be in the motion picture field—financing and distributing films made by independent producers—1957 saw UA's emergence as an important factor in the music and television industries as well.

In October of that year two subsidiaries were organized, United Artists Records, Inc., and Unart Music, Inc., with Youngstein as president of both firms.

The following month, United Artists Television, Inc., was established with Herbert L. Golden as president. Bruce G. Eells, a pioneer in the field of TV film and program syndication, was named executive vice-president of UA Television.

To round out its expansion program United Artists also took over the operation of two showcase Broadway theatres, the Astor and Victoria, on Jan. 1, 1958.

In August of 1958 United Artists Corp. acquired the stock of Lopert Films, Inc., a leading importer of foreign motion pictures. This subsidiary keeps its own identity.

U.S.-Israel C of C Honors UA's Krim

NEW YORK — Arthur B. Krim, president of United Artists, was presented with the Award of Merit of the American-Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry at the group's Sixth Annual Dinner at the Biltmore Hotel in New York last week.

Krim, dinner guest of honor, accepted the award in behalf of the motion picture industry for its enthusiastic participation in Israel's economic development during the past 10 years. The presentation was made by Nathan Straus III, president, American-Israel Chamber of Commerce. Some 600 film industry and trade leaders attended the dinner.

Accepting the award, Krim said that Israel was more than a customer for films. Its history as the Land of the Bible and the recent rebirth of a nation have given the industry both inspiration and themes for many of Hollywood's productions.

Straus stated that the motion picture industry's role went beyond trade relations as such. He cited as examples of this harmony the many visits by celebrities and the industry's executives to Israel, location shooting in that country, and the popularity of American movies in Israel.

H. E. Simcha Pratt, Israel's Council General in New York, extended an invitation to the American business community to provide his country with the investment capital and technical knowledge to enable the new state to continue its growth and development.

The Israeli official noted that trade between the two countries exceeded $100 million last year, bringing the total volume of economic relations between Israel and the U. S. (including investments, long term loans, travel, etc.) to the quarter billion dollar mark. Israel, he said, is now augmenting the production of goods for local consumption with the manufacture of export items and capital goods, and will extend every facility to foreign investors who wish to share in these developments. He lauded the Chamber's role in promoting the economic relations between the two countries.

An Israeli diamond pin, an original oil painting from Israel, and many Israeli gift items were given away at the dinner.

The affair was chaired by Albert I. Terhune, superintendent, American Foreign Insurance Association.

"Exodus," "Glorious Brothers" To Be Filmed in Israel

Krim announced that two major United Artists releases, Otto Preminger's film version of the current best-seller, "Exodus," and Arnold M. Picker, United Artists distribution vice-president, is seen on a visit to Tokyo being greeted by several of the Japanese Shochiku, Lt., starlets.

FOREIGN Observations

(UA 'Round the World)

AT THIS DATE, the character of the motion picture industry is genuinely international. American pictures are shown abroad, and foreign pictures are shown in this country; American stars appear in French, Italian and English films, and foreign stars appear in American films; and more and more pictures are being made on location abroad. But it was not always so. Xenophobia, both on the part of Hollywood and its foreign production centers, prevented any real interchange of ideas and people, and any real understanding of mutual problems. The breakdown of suspicion and hospitality began, as nearly as it is possible to pinpoint a gradual process, back in 1935, when Alexander Korda became a partner in United Artists. This event marked the first investment of British capital in an American firm. But, more than that, it ushered in the first real free interchange of directors, writers, actors and technicians on both sides of the Atlantic. For UA, it was a decisive move, to be sure, but not one that broke entirely new ground. Almost from its inception as a corporate entity, UA had been a little more interested in movie production abroad than had its colleagues among the major film companies. This interest was more or less dictated by the nature of the organization. UA does not produce its own pictures; it distributes and finances the pictures made for it by independent producers. Therefore, it is not committed to a huge annual program to utilize contract players and directors on salary, since it has none under contract; and, therefore, it has been free to look for its product wherever it might find good pictures—and this has included the pictures of foreign producers.

DURING ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY, United Artists is pointing with justifiable pride to its pioneer work in establishing rapport between the American industry and the industries of foreign countries. As early as 1921, two years after the founding of the company, UA distributed "I Accuse," French film based on the story of the Dreyfus Affair, produced and directed by Abel Gances. Long before they were generally accepted, UA helped market the pictures of such producers and directors as Erich Pommer, Herbert Wilcox, Alexander Korda, Paul Czinner, Fritz Lang, William Cameron Menzies, Rene Clair, Michael Balcon, Alfred Hitchcock, Roy Boulting, and many others. In recent years, the company has distributed many pictures made on foreign soil—Australia, Italy, France, England, India, Africa, the Philippines, Mexico, England, among other countries—and all of these and more have served as location sites for recent and current UA pictures.

From the standpoint of distribution on an international basis, United Artists is preeminent in the field. Its films are distributed in all major markets of the world through an elaborate network of film exchanges in 126 strategic cities and locations in all parts of the globe. Some indication of the energy with which UA prosecutes its global distribution policy may be gathered from the fact that foreign gross volume has jumped from less than $5,000,000 in 1951 to better than $32,000,000 in 1958. Although to some extent, monetary restrictions continue to exist in certain areas abroad, UA has been able to realize funds by concerted industry action through the Motion Picture Export Association, and through the activities of its producers in film-making ventures undertaken overseas.

Stanley Kramer's "My Glorious Brothers," will be filmed in Israel next year. Plans for these projects were revealed to the American-Israel Chamber of Commerce as Krim underscored the roles played by the motion picture industry in the economic progress of the Israeli nation over the past 10 years and in fostering greater understanding between the United States and the new republic.

Based on Leon M. Uris' novel which has been a leading entry on best-seller lists for 27 weeks, "Exodus" is the story of the stirring historical events surrounding the birth of the new nation of Israel, now observing a year-long celebration of its Tenth Anniversary. Uris, whose outstanding credits include the novel and screenplay of "Battle Cry" and the screenplay of "Gun Fight at OK Corral" has been assigned to write the screen version of "Exodus." Preminger will produce and direct.

"My Glorious Brothers" will be filmed from Howard Fast's novel about the dramatic Maccabean revolt of Jewish farmers against the might of the Greco-Syrian occupation army of Palestine 150 years before the birth of Christ.

Proof that the English queue up for United Artists releases are these recent shots showing lines at the Gaumont Haymarket for "The Horse's Mouth," and at the Odeon for "The Big Country."

E. E. Alger, father of Robert E. Alger, one of the winners of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR's recent 'Showman-Of-The-Year' contest, recently celebrated his golden anniversary in the industry at the Peru, Peru, Ill., on which the winning entry was based. In a good natured argument, he claimed that if it wasn't for his anniversary, Junior wouldn't have won the prize. Junior settled for the check, while Senior settled for having his picture on the cover.

WOMAN—SCOPE

WE LIKE the idea that Si Seadler proposed recently at the Annual Conference of The Federation of Motion Picture Councils, Inc. Rather than take a bow for some industry achievement, or flatter the assembled ladies on some actual or fancied accomplishments, Si offered a suggestion that could implement their obvious desire to see motion pictures progress. To put it briefly, he suggested that they go to work.

The fields of this proposed work would be: (1) "where the economic survival of a local theatre is threatened"; and (2) to build "a better understanding and more aggressive local approach to censorship."

According to Si: "Apart from entertainment factors, an open theatre affects many of you personally, perhaps more than you have given thought to. It is an unquestioned fact, based on experience, that a lighted theatre is a beacon in the community. Think that over! It is good for business generally because the shops keep lighted and people window-shop with their families and subsequently buy. All business is interlocked in the sense that good business is good for the community, providing better schools, a better community life, etc. A lighted theatre is not as remote as you might think offhand. Keep the theatre lighted in your community."

And again: "In a very real sense the survival not only of the screen itself, but of our democratic way of life is at stake, unless undemocratic, totalitarian censorship clouds are dispelled . . . We have laws in all the states, as well as federal laws, against obscenity in any form, and they apply to movies books, TV, and all other forms of mass communication. Your efforts should be to remind legislators to support existing laws, not to impose new ones . . . Don't let the unthinking hysteria of the moment saddle you with laws that you'll long regret. Be militant! Organize committees before you leave this conference, to service all your local groups with bulletins telling them to write letters to their editor, to go on local radio and TV program, and to influence opinion makers in their communities."

Such activities were termed "woman-scope", that would give their organization a new vital significance along with CinemaScope and all of the other "scope" advancements in modern movies. We like that "woman-scope"!

I AM YOUR MOVIE PATRON

WE ARE GRATEFUL to Ed Rosenbaum, a senior publicist of some repute, for the following that he claims to have found in his overcoat pocket. The authorship is unknown.

"I am one of those nice movie patrons who never complain about anything.

"For instance: When I telephone to find out what's playing, or when the next feature starts, I don't get mad when some grouch acts insulting, or makes a discourteous reply. If the cashier or doorman is surly, and acts as though they wish I'd go away, it doesn't rile me. And when the ushers don't offer to seat me, I don't mind but just wait 'til I can see in the darkness, and then find my own seat. I'm a nice movie patron!

"It's the same way when I want some candy, and the stand attendant is talking to friends. Or if some rowdy kids or grown-ups who sit near are spoiling the show. And if the sound is too loud or too soft, or the theatre is too hot or too cold. I never make a scene or bawl someone out, for I'm an easy-going patron.

"If the show isn't as super colossal as you said it was, or if I go to the rest room and find it dirty and out of towels, I don't complain to the manager or make a fuss. That's the way I am. No, I never complain, or argue, or criticize. I'm just a nice patron.

"But I'll tell you what else I am: I'm the patron who doesn't come back! Because, you see, in spite of the above, I'm also a dissatisfied patron. And I'm not alone!

"Sometimes I wonder why theatremen spend so much money to get the "lost audience" back, when you could have kept us, in the first place, with just a little service and courtesy."

There is many a theatre where the above should be distributed to the cashier, to the doorman, to the ushers, to the projectionists, to the cleaners, and even to the manager and assistant manager. The old bit of wisdom, about wearing the shoe that fits you, should apply. And, if you have read it through and can find no application to your theatre, why—CONGRATULATIONS!

THE FUTURE OF 70 mm. PROJECTION

ANY INDUSTRY observer must be conscious of the swelling interest in 70 mm. projection and full stereophonic sound, and of the tremendous grosses that the public is awarding to the several pictures that have been offered in that medium. Four different equipment manufacturing sources will soon make complete booth facilities available in the giant size; and it does promise to be the equipment line that will distinguish the long-run, deluxe presentation, road-show theatre from its lower admissioned, less deluxe, first-run competitor.

Of course, the show and its entertainment qualities will still be the deciding factor for public patronage. It always has been. And after the newness wears off, this selectivity by the public will become more and more noticeable. But, meanwhile, some shows are going to be materially helped by their 70 mm. attributes alone.

We just wonder whether some quality standards will be demanded by the producers of big shows in 70 mm.? Will they accept any equipment capable of handling 70 mm. film, or will there be some system of inspection and acceptance similar to the early days of CinemaScope, and to the wide screen introduction of "80 DAYS"?

Possibly the answer to this will come from the SMPTE, or from some other authoritative industry body, before too great an investment is sunk into a muddled situation.

Letters . . .

UNSOLICITED • The letters from readers which appear on this page are not solicited. MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR does not suggest questions to readers in order to provide a flow of letters.

From LONDON, ENGLAND

On looking through the latest issue of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR to reach my desk I was very interested to see the prominence given in Jock MacGregor's LONDON OBSERVATIONS to our 1958 Management Contest. This was very much appreciated.

W. CARTLIDGE, General Manager
Associated British Cinemas Ltd.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We're proud of Jock MacGregor, and of the fine job he is doing in covering London and surrounding areas.

From HARRISBURG, PA.

Mightn't it be both good business and potential profit to set up a magazine rack at our confection stand and to offer the six or eight movie fan magazines to our patrons? These are the sheets that have the same vital interest in selling our industry to the public, and theatres all over the country should pick it up. What could be a better audience to get interested in what's happening at movie theatres?

BERN BISBECK
Senate Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sounds like a good idea. Let's see what others think about it. If there is response we'll be happy to forward letters to the particular circulation managers.

From SARASOTA, FLA.

Although this is my first letter to a trade paper in my 25 years in the industry, I can certainly assure you that I do read with interest the letters sent in by fellow exhibitors. I chose to write to MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR because I sincerely believe it to be the liveliest publication in the field today. Certainly it always has more "Meat" for exhibitors than the other papers.

The thing that has stirred my interest to the point of letter writing is all this ado about urging theatremen to inform their patrons to tune in on the April 6 Academy Awards Telecast. I have been in show business all my life (nearly 40 years). My father, prior to his death, had devoted another 45 years to active exhibition. As a showman, the thing that was always drilled into my mind was to sell tickets. Now, tell me, how in the name of Barnum can anyone be successful by telling his patrons to stay home? I won't do it, not even for one night a year. The telecast will enjoy another record-breaking audience, anyway.

I agree wholeheartedly about the industry carrying the burden of financing the program, and believe its influence on our patrons will exceed our fondest expectations. However, I will not befuddle my customers by urging them to stay home. Too many people, once good theatre customers, have been converted to TV staying home.

In my own situation the answer is simple. I have just promoted a TV set and put it in my Snack Bar. If my customers want to see the telecast it is there for them, in my theatre, and after they have bought a ticket. I'll be trying to sell them a Pizza, too!

There must be some solution other than to tell our patrons: "Stay home tonight and tune in channel so-and-so."

HUGH THOMAS, JR.
Siesta Drive-In Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Many theatremen may share Mr. Thomas' feelings, and he has obviously come up with a smart answer. As an industry, the installation of a TV set in a lobby or snack bar can't be recommended or approved. Nothing on the airways can be shown for an admission charge. But, if your regular show is running on, and if the TV set is just an added service, whose business is it?

SEE FOR YOURSELF!

From MERRICK, L.I., N.Y.

With regard to SLIDING SCALE, and other percentage buying where "Playing Time Units" are a consideration, I feel that some of the unit values should be changed. The volume of business that a theatre does today is different from what it was even five years ago. Starting with Sunday at two units, Monday and Tuesday should be only ½ unit each, Wednesday and Thursday should be one unit each, Friday two units, and Saturday three units.

AT PRESSTIME

On this bright summery Friday afternoon, a torrent of theatre executives reaction to the separate saveable section on SLIDING SCALE, as published in last Wednesday's issue (April 15), has started to roll in. Based on it, we expect that on Monday will come the deluge.
MORE ON THAT LATER!

It is a modern necessity to subscribe to MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR for the services it renders are complete and up-to-date.

WALTER F. J. HIGGINS
Associated Prudential Theatres, Inc.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mr. Higgins may have a good point that should be applied to many other theatres. Naturally, "playing time units" should represent the share of the average week's business that is done on that particular day.

From WASHBURN, N. DAK.

The only thing that MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR still needs is a chart, or some kind of guide, showing how current pictures are grossing. Something like the "little men" of The Check-Up that was run for so many years. We aren't so interested in the Broadway grosses, as in a cross-section of later play from which we can judge our own success.

KENNETH CHRISTIANSON,
Owner-Manager
Roxy Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: In the works, and being tested week after week, is what we feel will be the most quick and useful of all such guides. Give us a few more weeks and we think you'll rave about it. And thanks for noticing, Mr. Christianson!

From WINCHESTER, HANTS., ENGLAND

I was delighted to read that I had named one of the 25 runners-up in the 1958 "SHOW-MEN-OF-THE-YEAR" contest. And I want to wish everybody who enters the 1959 contest—good hunting and the best of luck! I am sure it will be even a bigger success than the last one.

Besides the very obvious fact that your EXPLOITATION section helps immeasurably to raise the standards of showmanship, your annual contest also brings together theatremen throughout the world, into one big family. Although we appear to be competing against each other, we are really competing together against other forms of entertainment for the long life and prosperity of our industry. MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR has played an important part in fostering this family spirit of friendly rivalry and help, and I am sure it will continue to do so.

TONY EWIN, Manager
Ritz Cinema

EDITOR'S NOTE: These boys from the British Isles are very promotion conscious, and do a good job even in the smaller situations. Friendly competition with them is certain to be profitable.

From KARACHI, PAKISTAN

I read with great interest your Editorial (Feb. 25) titled "WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT PERCENTAGE BUYING?"; and your reference to the survey on the Sliding Scale Method that had originally been published in 1955. I would be extremely grateful if a re-edited copy, or the old one, would be sent to me at your earliest convenience.

HUMAYUN H. BAIGMOHAMED
H. Husein and Co.

EDITOR'S NOTE: The old adage about the man "who built a better mousetrap" seems to apply. Theatremen and exchangemen around the world have shown a very serious interest in Sliding Scales, and how they operate. The re-edited version of our survey was published as a separate saveable section accompanying the April 15 issue.

S.F. Hails Reopening Of Renovated House

SAN FRANCISCO — This city's gratitude was bestowed recently on Sherrill C. Corwin, president of North Coast Theatres Corporation, owner of the United Artists, for remodeling the Market Street house to the tune of $250,000.

A Citation of Achievement from the Downtown Association was jointly presented by Mayor George Christopher and Albert E. Schlessinger, president of the merchant group, for Corwin's "faith in the future of downtown San Francisco and in the motion picture industry."

The award was made in front of the face-lifted UA even as workmen were putting the finishing touches on the rejuvenation of the house built in 1912.

In accepting the award Corwin said: "The United Artists Theatre will continue in the same fine tradition established by the original owners, Sid Grauman and his father, J. D. Grauman. We shall continue to bring to the theatre, the finest, most entertaining motion pictures available."

The UA opened (April 23) with a gala invitational premiere of Billy Wilder's "Some Like It Hot." A contingent of Hollywood luminaries was on hand for the occasion.

Local DST Option Seen

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The Minnesota House of Representatives last week voted down a compromise proposal which would have provided for the continuation of statewide daylight saving time for two summers followed by a voter referendum in November, 1960.

This does not mean, however, that DST is dead. A Senate-passed bill to repeal a statewide law in effect until May 30 is buried in a House Committee.

This means that the statewide law will expire May 30, but metropolitan counties and Duluth may institute DST by majority action of their governing bodies.

Mort Gerber, left, general manager, District Theatres in Washington, D.C., and his wife meet Will Hutchins, star of the "Sugarfoot" television series, on a visit to Warner Bros. Studio in Burbank, Cal.

Col. Expands Promotion Plans

HOLLYWOOD — Paul N. Lazarus, Jr., Columbia vice-president, last week outlined a "new concept in promotion" by which, he said, his company's whole approach to the merchandising of pictures will follow a "cradle to boxoffice" pattern designed to utilize every available channel of advertising and publicity to the full measure of its potential.

He introduced the principal members of the "team" he has completed after a year of recruiting—Jonas Rosenfield, Robert Ferguson, John C. Flinn, and Robert Goodfried.

"We expect to expand in all media," Lazarus said. "We are an enthusiastic company and we want to share that enthusiasm with our exhibitor customers and our independent producer-partners. We believe in the future of our business and we want them to believe in it with us."

Harris Bill Would Control Cable-TV

Toll-TV By Wire Would Be Under Same FCC Limits As Airwave Pay-As-You-See Tests; Long Delay Seen

WASHINGTON—A bill designed to place testing of cable toll television, including operations within a single state, under strict FCC supervision has been introduced in Congress by Rep. Oren Harris.

"You cannot have uncontrolled tests of pay television by wire if tests of pay television by radio are subject to strict limitations prescribed by the FCC," he said.

The bill curbed industry rumors that Rep. Harris was relenting in his firm stand against commercial pay-as-you-see TV.

"Let me emphasize," Rep. Harris continued, "that the introduction of this bill in no way should be construed as proposing to authorize pay television by wire on any extended or permanent basis."

The Congressman went on to remove consideration of commercial pay television from the program of the Congress now in session, which will continue until Jan. 1, 1961, and place action in the jurisdiction of some future session.

There was no explanation as to what will happen to the FCC order that applications for toll television licenses will be processed 30 days after adjournment of the first half of the current session, expected in late summer. The Commission, which answers to Congress, probably will not undertake to process applications while prohibitory legislation is pending.

"The question of whether such extended or permanent operations should be authorized must be left to a future Congress to determine. After these limited tests have been conducted, and after experience has been gained, a future Congress may be in a better position to determine whether or not such extended or permanent operations should be conducted," he said.

Heretofore, under FCC interpretations, intra-state telecasts-for-pay were beyond the reach of Federal control and required no license from Washington.

Rep. Harris pointed up the fact that transmissions are possible either by radio or by lines and that broadcasters intended to use both. His bill, he emphasized, deals with toll television by wire, but with tests only. It empowers FCC to set up regulations to be effective for the period of such tests.

Purpose of the new bill is to insure that during the period radio broadcasts are being tested under strict regulations, wire transmissions will be under the same strictures.

Ala.-Ga. Exhibs In Joint Meet

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—The Alabama Theatres Association and Motion Picture Theatre Operators of Georgia will hold a joint one-day meeting in Atlanta on Wednesday, May 20.

This was announced by Richard M. Kennedy of Birmingham, president, Alabama unit, and J. H. Thompson, Hawkinsville, Ga., president, Georgia unit. Both are affiliated with national TOA.

Kennedy and Thompson said that the committee making arrangements for the meeting consists of James H. Harrison, Wilby-Kincey Theatres; John H. Stembler, Georgia Theatre Company; and Carl Patrick, Martin Theatres.

Cal. Bill Would Bar Simultaneous Pay, Free-TV

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—A bill introduced in the California Legislature last fortnight by Assemblyman Louis Francis, San Mateo, would make it illegal to toll-televise any program that is being offered at the same time anywhere in the state on free-TV, if and when pay-TV becomes a reality.

In a twin bill, Francis also sought to have the Public Utilities Commission given full power to license and regulate pay-TV instead of allowing the authority to be vested with the individual California municipal communities.

"Why All The Fuss?" Heineman Asks Exhibs

NEW YORK—William J. Heineman, United Artists vice-president in charge of distribution, declared last fortnight that "It is hard for me to imagine why all of the fuss has been created over the announcement of our sales policy."

He continued that it was "our intention when we made the statement as it is our intention now to establish, in a business-like manner, a uniform plan of orderly distribution; to sell our product on an equitable and realistic basis; to collect the money due our producers; to put an end to exhibitors' making arbitrary adjustments without our prior consultation and approval; to meet with any customer, who is willing to present the facts; and to give relief, if revision of the percentage terms is justified."

The American Congress of Exhibitors' executive committee stated that it was their "sincere hope that UA will immediately reconsider and modify" its new "get tough" sales policy.

The statement said UA was asked to take such action "to the extent that the company once again will enjoy the widespread confidence and good will of theatre men everywhere."

The committee represented itself as "seriously disturbed by the number of complaints from every segment of exhibition resulting from the new sales policy of United Artists."

U Profit Up Slightly

NEW YORK—Milton R. Rackmil, president, Decca Records, revealed last fortnight that the company's profits during the first quarter of calendar 1959 were "slightly higher" than for January-March last year.

First quarter 1958 earnings were 11 cents a share, based on net profit of $116,117. Although Rackmil declined to estimate the increase in this year's profits, he disclosed that sales were 10 per cent higher.

Decca's subsidiary, Universal Pictures, was in the "black" in the second fiscal quarter, February-April, for which it will show a profit, Rackmil noted, adding, that there is no present intention to merge the two companies. He also stated there was no intention now to sell U's post-1948 film library, nor does U-I plan TV production.

Stockholders reelected to the board of directors were Rackmil, Leonard W. Schneider, Martin P. Salkin, Albert A. Garthwaite, Harold I. Thorpe, and Samuel H. Vallance.

TOA Cautions Exhibs On 70mm Conversion

NEW YORK—The paucity of wide film pictures has prompted the Theatre Owners of America to issue a cautionary warning to theatres not to equip now for 70mm projection unless they plan roadshow operation, in the near future.

In a special bulletin to its members TOA said that the warning was based on a survey of forthcoming 65mm and 70mm product from the major film companies. The bulletin said that "even in a roadshow house you might have difficulty getting enough product for full-year operation to permit orderly amortization of the sizable investment you will have to make for equipment."

"Only Loew's with 'Ben Hur,' Disney with 'Big Fisherman' and the current 'Sleeping Beauty,' and Columbia with 'Porgy and Bess' reported specific pictures in 70mm or related wide-film processes," said the bulletin. Only 20th-Fox has reported plans to make one or two pictures a year in 70mm. No company has indicated a definite program which would assure theatre owners a steady flow of product. Most companies indicated that all their 70mm products would also be made available in 35mm.

A further check by TOA revealed only one other film definitely slated for wide-film production. That was Buena Vista's "Swiss Family Robinson."

"Based on this imposing but numerically small roster of wide-film pictures, TOA feels that, except for roadshow situations, most theatres would be premature to invest in 70mm equipment at this time. The normal commercial or small town theatre with 70mm equipment could use it only a relatively limited number of weeks out of the year," the bulletin said. The TOA missive added that it felt all five films now in 70mm would be made available in 35mm.

AB-PT Names Brown

NEW YORK—Martin Brown has been elected assistant treasurer of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and vice-president and assistant treasurer of American Broadcasting Company, it was announced last fortnight by Simon B. Siegel, financial vice-president of AB-PT and vice-president and treasurer of ABC.

Simon B. Siegel, financial vice-president and treasurer, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and of the American Broadcasting Company, last week was elected a member of the AB-PT board of directors executive committee.

Other members of the executive committee are John A. Coleman, chairman; H. Golden-son, E. Chester Gersten, Robert H. Hinckley, Walter P. Marshall, and H. Hugh McConnell.

N.Y.'s Busy Film-Snippers

NEW YORK—Louis M. Pesce, director, Motion Picture Division of the State Education Department, last fortnight revealed that the State's censoring body had licensed fewer films in 1958-59 than the year before.

Of the 1,089 films this year, none were rejected in toto. Most of the films requiring cuts were either foreign made or produced outside the MPAA's Production Code Administration.

"Modern Times" Print Brings Copyright Battle

NEW YORK—Showings of Charles Chaplin's "Modern Times" at the Inwood Art Theatre in Queens were brought to a halt last week when a U.S. Marshal served court papers and picked up the 16mm print by which the showings were being made for impounding in Brooklyn Federal Court.

Issuance of the writ had been directed by an order signed by Judge Mortimer W. Byers in a copyright infringement suit filed by the Roy Export Company as owner of the copyright in "Modern Times" and other Chaplin films, and Lopert Films, Inc., as sole authorized distributor of "Modern Times" for the U.S.

Plaintiffs charged in the complaint that the showings of the picture were unauthorized and infringed the copyright in "Modern Times," and further claimed that the Inwood Art Theatre advertising of an alleged exclusive and final run in the New York, New Jersey and Connecticut area, as well as the quality of the exhibition of the picture by the 16mm print, constituted unfair trade practices and unfair competition. Plaintiffs sued for damages, an accounting, and for injunctive relief, as well as the seizure and impounding in court of the print.

The defendants named in the complaint were Robert B. Fischer, Washington, D.C.; Mark Redwood, Hyattsville, Md.; Ed Saretsky, Philadelphia; Fred Von Bernewitz, and Excellent Films, Inc., a New York corporation.

Warnings to desist by telegram and letter had been given and ignored, according to the complaint, before the claimed unauthorized showings began with the opening of the theatre as the Inwood Art Theatre following advertisings in the metropolitan dailies that it was "the last seven days of an exclusive, final and only showing in the metropolitan area."

Edward A. Sargoy, of the law firm of Sargoy and Stein, attorneys for Roy Export Company, stated he had witnessed a showing of the film at the Inwood Art, and identified it as a copy of the copyrighted motion picture originally released by Chaplin in 1936 through United Artists, whose U.S. distribution rights had expired many years ago.

Suit Charges Freeze-Out

SAN FRANCISCO—Woodrow and Leroy Estes, Chicato, Cal., last week filed an anti-trust suit in U.S. District Court here demanding $140,000 trebled damages.

Defendants are United California Theatres, 20th-Fox, Warners, Paramount, UA, MGM, Universal and Columbia.

The Estes claim they were forced to close their Vecino, Chico, in 1957 after six years of competition with United California's Senator and Elrey. They charge that the circuit conspired with the distributors to eliminate competition by overbidding for first run film rentals; and that the Elrey changed its policy of second to first-runs in 1955 to combine with the Senator to "freeze out" Vecino.

AI Starts Record Firm

HOLLYWOOD — American International Records has been formed for the manufacture, sale and distribution of records of songs and sound tracks from American International Pictures features, it is announced by company executives James H. Nicholson and Samuel Z. Arkoff. AIR also will record other than AIP film songs and scores, with emphasis on new vocal and band talent, Nicholson and Arkoff reported.

Loew's Plans Name Switch To MGM; Vogel Reports Huge Rise In Income

ACE, MPA Leaders Plan Top Level Meet May 12

NEW YORK—The executive committee of the American Congress of Exhibitors at its meeting last week accepted the invitation of the Motion Picture Association committee on exhibitor relations for a meeting at the Harvard Club on May 12.

The ACE committee will consist of S. H. Fabian, national chairman of ACE; Horace Adams, president of Allied; George Kerasotes, president of TOA; Sol Schwartz, president, Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatre Association; Harry Brandt, president of I.T.O.A.; and Harry Arthur, chairman of the board, Pacific Coast Theatres Association.

Members of the M.P.A. exhibitor relations committee are Spyros Skouras, Arthur Krim, and Eric Johnston.

"Young Land" Premiere Launches Art Gallery

CODY, WYOMING—It was announced last fortnight that "The Young Land", a C. V. Whitney production for Columbia release, will have its world premiere here on April 25 as part of a two-day celebration marking the opening of the Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney Gallery of Modern Art.

The film's star Pat Wayne will attend and Whitney, whose donation started the construction of the gallery, will dedicate the building which cost over half a million dollars and will display the largest and most representative collection of western art ever exhibited in one place. William Rogers Coe will present to the gallery, on behalf of the Coe Foundation, the Frederick Remington Studio collection. Following the dedication there will be a dinner honoring Whitney and members of the Coe Foundation, followed by the premiere of the film.

The next day will be highlighted by a tour of the Buffalo Bill Museum, started in 1927. Many private parties are being arranged for the entertainment of the scores of visitors, socialities and celebrities expected to attend the dedication celebration. A special brunch for press representatives will be given by the Buffalo Bill Memorial Association.

Goldstein Joins Columbia

NEW YORK—E. H. (Manny) Goldstein, veteran studio production man, has joined Columbia Pictures in an executive capacity. At one time he served as studio manager for Columbia for five years.

Goldstein served Universal for 17 years as treasurer and general manager before moving to the Hal Roach Studio as studio manager, a post he recently resigned.

U-I Declares Dividend

NEW YORK—The board of directors of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has declared a quarterly dividend of $1.0625 per share on the 4¼ per cent cumulative preferred stock of the company.

The dividend is payable June 1, 1959, to stockholders of record at the close of business on May 15, 1959.

NEW YORK—Joseph R. Vogel, president of Loew's, Inc., (MGM), announced last week that the board of directors plans to recommend to stockholders the change of the company's name to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation.

Vogel also announced that, for the first 28-week period of the current fiscal year during which time Loew's was a combined enterprise including Loew's Theatres and Radio Station WMGM, consolidated net income amounted to $5,749,000, or $1.08 per share, based on the 5,336,777 shares then outstanding. This compares with a consolidated net income of $509,000 or 10 cents per share in the corresponding period one year earlier.

Vogel also supplied a breakdown of these earnings as between the two companies into which Loew's, Inc., was divided on March 12. Of the consolidated net income of $5,749,000, $951,000 was attributable to what is now Loew's Theatres, Inc., and $4,798,000 to the new Loew's, Inc. (MGM).

As the stockholders of Loew's, Inc., receive one half share of stock in each of the two new companies for each share of old stock, each company now has 2,668,388 shares of common stock outstanding. On this basis, earnings per share were $1.80 for Loew's, Inc., and 36 cents per share for Loew's Theatres for the first half of the current fiscal year.

"Last year," he said, "during the first half, a 28-week period, the divisions which now make up MGM incurred a loss of $483,000 before interest and taxes. For the same period, this year, the same divisions show a profit before interest and taxes of $10,792,000. The big difference is due to a sharply improved performance in film production-distribution which showed a loss of over $5,000,000 in the 28-week period last year compared to a profit of almost $5,000,000 during the same period this year."

Vogel reviewed the company's affairs for a representative group from the financial community. In his remarks, he reported that the company was studying possible diversification moves.

Vogel reported that the forthcoming release of "Ben-Hur" has created enormous excitement in the motion picture industry. He said:

"Our sales department is being literally besieged by theatre owners throughout the world, many of them offering huge guarantees for the right to exhibit this picture in their theatres. They offer to modify and improve both the interior and exterior of their theatres—for the right to show "Ben-Hur." Many believe that this one picture will do more to revive the film industry than anything that has been presented since the end of World War II."

Brandeis Campaign Launched

NEW YORK—The amusement arts division to support Brandeis University will climax its first annual campaign in the motion picture, television, theatrical, radio and allied fields at a gala dinner on May 5 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, it was announced by George P. Skouras, president of United Artists Theatre Circuit, who is chairman of the division.

Recently formed, the Amusement Arts Division plans an annual concentration in the entertainment field to strengthen the campus activities of Brandeis in the creative arts and to develop new sources of creative talent.

List, Glen Alden Merger Approved; 50 G.A. Stockholders Oppose Plan

NEW YORK—The merging of List Industries Corp. into the Glen Alden Corp. was confirmed by a stockholders' vote last week. The consolidation had been proposed and blocked last year.

Voting followed an earnings report by chairman and president Albert A. List.

Net earnings for the first quarter, ended March 31, totaled $1,379,732, or 33 cents a share, a 120 percent increase over the $640,090, 15-cents-a-share report for last year's first quarter.

RKO Theatres, a List division, contributed more than 30 percent to the $1,379,732 net. List declined to break down divisional results.

Forecasting a "profitable" year, List told the assembled stockholders that the company's present rate of earnings was in excess of $9,000,000 before taxes.

List shareholders approved the merger plan 3,635,690 to 16,435 shares. Glen Alden shareholders voted on the measure yesterday. A. A. List would become president of Glen Alden, surviving firm with combined assets exceeding $132,000,000.

As List stockholders met, some 50 Glen Alden shareholders, headed by Samuel Gilbert, were suing in Kings County Supreme Court for a permanent injunction against the merger.

Re-elected to the List board by a vote of 3,737,376 each were Ralph E. Case, T. R. Colborn, William J. Durocher, Alvin O. Herud, Milton Hubschman, Dudley G. Layman, List, Vera G. List, A. Louis Oresman, A. H. Parker, Jr.; Edward C. Raftery and Sol. A. Schwartz.

List said that he did not expect the proposed sale of five theatres in New York to be concluded before June. Negotiations are active, with provisions for leasing to an RKO Theatres subsidiary. List estimated a $3,200,000 before-tax profit from the sale.

Mont. Convention On May 5

BILLINGS, MONT.—The Montana Theatre Association will hold its annual convention in the Northern Hotel, Billings, Mont., May 5 and 6. The conclave had originally been set for Apr. 28-29.

The Association is an affiliate of the Theatre Owners of America. Among speakers scheduled to appear at the meeting is George Roscoe, TOA's director of exhibitor relations.

ABC Vending Income Soars

NEW YORK—The net income of ABC Vending Corporation last week was reported as $1,877,371 in the 52 weeks ended Dec. 28, an increase of 31 per cent over the $1,429,222 for 1957. Earnings last year equalled $1.67 per share, against $1.27 in 1957.

Sales and other operating revenues in 1958 were $64,597,461, 15 per cent more than the $56,006,937 reported for 1957.

Mirisch Schedules Six

HOLLYWOOD—Harold Mirisch, president, Mirisch Company, announced last fortnight that the company has scheduled six productions for United Artists release with a budget of $20,000,000, starting in July.

The titles are "The Proving Flight," "633 Squadron," "The Apartment," "Two For The Seesaw," "By Love Possessed," and "Battle."

Goldwyn Suit To Jury On S. F. Legal Traffic Jam

SAN FRANCISCO—It was learned last fortnight that Samuel Goldwyn had become the second multi-million dollar plaintiff in an unfinished movie monopoly suit here to demand a retrial by jury.

Dan McLean and Lee Dibble, owners, independent Embassy, were granted a new trial by jury by Federal Judge Howard Burke. Goldwyn seeks $2,000,000 in damages, while McLean and Dibble ask $8,000,000 in their antitrust litigation.

Both cases had been heard without juries before the late Judge Edward P. Murphy last year and were halted with only a short time to go by his death.

Mich. Heaps Honors On Col.'s "Anatomy"

LANSING, MICH.—A most unusual honor was bestowed upon Otto Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder" when the picture, still in early shooting stages in location in Marquette County, received the award of "Michigan Product of the Year."

"Products of Michigan" is the theme of the "Week." While some natives are being employed to do bits and walk-ons, the novel from which the picture was taken is located in Michigan and is by a Michigan author. Main personnel and equipment stem from Hollywood.

However, chairman of the board of judges Dan Gerber, president, Gerber's Baby Foods, Inc., had this to say: "No product could typify that great diversity of Michigan Products and their importance to their respective fields better than the motion picture, 'Anatomy of a Murder.'"

Regarding this "Michigan Product" of a probable murderer, the following fellow-motion picture "experts" on the board of judges agreed unanimously on the award: Dr. John Hannah, Michigan State University president; Merritt Hill, general manager, Ford Tractor and Implement Division; August Scholle, president, Michigan State AFL-CIO; and Mrs. Charles Neidrett, president, Michigan PTA Congress.

"The Young Philadelphians"

Here is a picture that should please large audiences everywhere, whether in Philadelphia or Squeedunk. With a big, hoop-la exploitation campaign set to cover more than 30 cities and close to 200 towns, this picture seems destined to set the box office tingling.

Paul Newman, one of the screen's most talented young performers, does one of the best jobs in his already remarkable career. Barbara Rush, his co-star, not only is good to look at but also is quite convincing in her portrayal.

This is another instance where Hollywood has taken a best-selling, much discussed novel and turned it into a superior piece of screen entertainment.

UA Branches Battle For Huge Drive Loot

NEW YORK—Byron Adams, UA branch manager in Jacksonville; George Heiber, UA branch manager in Toronto; and Isadore J. Davis, UA branch manager in St. John, lead their respective divisions in the eighth week of United Artists 40th Anniversary sales drive, it was announced last week by co-captains James R. Velde, general sales manager, and Roger H. Lewis, national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

William Hames, southern district manager, leads the district standings, and Sidney Cooper, central and southern division manager, is leading in the division standings.

Commemorating the founding of United Artists on April 17, 1919, the 22-week campaign for collections, billings and playdates will award more than $60,000 in cash prizes to the winners among 33 branches competing in the United States and Canada. This is the shortest drive for the most money in prizes ever offered by UA.

The sales push simultaneously honors the eighth anniversary of UA's management by Arthur B. Krim, president; Robert S. Benjamin, chairman of the board; William J. Heineman, vice-president in charge of distribution; Max E. Youngstein, vice-president; and Arnold M. Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution.

PARIS—Due to the continued absence of Harry Novak and the indefinite date of his return, Lacy W. Kastner, president of Columbia International has announced the appointment of Norbert T. Auerbach as acting Continental manager for Europe and the Near East.

Auerbach will continue directing all matters relating to sales in the territories under his control.

Kastner also has appointed John McNab administrative supervisor for Continental Europe and the Near East.

AB-PT Dividend Set

NEW YORK—Leonard H. Goldenson, president of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., announced last week that the board of directors declared the second quarterly dividend of 25 cents per share on the outstanding common stock and 25 cents per share on the outstanding preferred stock of the corporation, payable June 15 to holders of record on May 22.

Record Advance For "Porgy"

NEW YORK—The highest advance sale for a reserved-seat motion picture ever was reported last fortnight for Samuel Goldwyn's "Porgy and Bess" due at the Warner on June 24. The total as of April 14 was claimed as $83,670 by the special unit set up at Columbia.

Gov. Vetoes Bingo Bill

ALBANY—A bill permitting bingo and lotto to be played at agricultural fairs and expositions, under the auspices of bona fide religious, charitable, or other non-profit organizations, has been vetoed by Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller. He based the disapproval on the grounds those events "are family affairs which have for many years been part of the fabric of our economic and social life in rural counties . . . any change in the primary purpose should be made only after due consideration."

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecuff

ONE DAY last week was "Max Youngstein Day" at the Hotel Piccadilly, where Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held a luncheon at which the United Artists executive was guest of honor. Labeled "the Casey Stengel of the motion picture industry" by toastmaster Arthur Mayer, who did an admirable job in shirt sleeves a la Youngstein, Youngstein touched on the industry, its past, present, and future.

He reported that he was puzzled as to exactly what to discuss with his audience, mulling over such topics as "Were Horror Films More Or Less Popular Since The Introduction of Mother's Day?" or "Herbert Hoover And The Effect Of His Administration On William Fox", or "Silent Calvin Collidge And The Introduction Of The Talking Movies", etc., etc.

He finally decided to generalize, and he wondered whether or not the industry wasn't taking itself too seriously, labeling the day of brawling and out-and-out Barnum and Bailey showmanship as tasteless. He thought that we are so determined to be accepted by everyone that we are willing to sacrifice principles.

Regarding censorship, the solution is a simple one, needled he. Wherever there is enough pressure put on—give in. He wondered what other industry would fail to take advantage of a Supreme Court decision in its favor. All it's costing the industry is money, principle, and pride. He said he was naive enough to expect the Motion Picture Association to accomplish something, but its executives made it clear that such was not the case.

He interjected some other suggestions for topics of the day, such as the Academy Awards, how well it was run, and the good it did for the industry, but some might shout "sour grapes" at him since "Gigi" was not a UA release. He could have dwelled on the righteous indignation of many in the industry at his company's request to pay what a contract called for.

He turned serious for a bit, noting that the next two or three years will see the rate of change in this business accelerated. They will be tough ones and will take place in every phase of the business, opined he. He felt that any problems that come up at United Artists could be solved no matter how difficult. Said he, "We will survive and prevail."

He reported that everyone in the company has worked hard, and he took pride in the fact that each year the company has added to its manpower with one department more than tripling its manpower and operations. Individuals in each department have expanded their knowledge so that the essentials of promotions and merchandising have been absorbed to a fine degree.

The problems that arise in the near future can be solved, and he prophesied that the company will get out of the category of strictly motion pictures and become rather an entertainment company in the broader sense of the word.

Dais guests at the luncheon included the following UA executives: Arthur B. Krim, president; Robert S. Benjamin, chairman of the board; William J. Heineman, vice-president in charge of distribution; Arnold M. Picker, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution; Leon Goldberg, vice-president and treasurer; Seward I. Benjamin, secretary; Joseph Ende, controller; James R. Velde, general sales manager; Roger H. Lewis, national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation; Fred Goldberg, executive assistant to Roger H. Lewis; Mort Nathanson, publicity manager; Joe Gould, advertising manager; Mori Krushen, exploitation manager; and David Picker, executive assistant to Max E. Youngstein.

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY: United Artists executives took note of the company's 40th anniversary to hold a "thank you" luncheon at the 21 Club for editors and publishers of the trade press, where gratitude was duly expressed to industry scribes. Max Youngstein, subdued and non-controversial, acted as toastmaster, introducing prexy Arthur B. Krim.

The latter made a brief progress report wherein he noted that the course of the company is still on the upgrade. He expressed thanks not only to those present but also to exhibitor friends of the company for their good wishes and concrete help.

The company, he noted, is heading into new areas of operation which will be covered more fully at a regular progress report session in the near future. He did remark that the TV, recording, and Lopert film division reports were very gratifying, with greater contributions due from these over the next two years. The picture part of the operation will, however, remain the principal one.

The first quarter of 1959 shows a healthy increase over the same period last year, with $16,200,000 in for the 1958 period while the same period this year saw $19,300,000 in, or an increase of 17 per cent. Predictions for the balance of the year are for a substantial increase. He promised that the company will deliver everything it has announced.

Gala "Philadelphians" Bow

PHILADELPHIA—It was jointly announced last week by Arthur C. Kaufmann, special events chairman of the Devon Horse Show, and Frank Damis, zone manager, Stanley Warner Theatres, that the world premier of Warners' "The Young Philadelphians" at the Stanley on May 19 will be sponsored by the Devon Horse Show and County Fair for the benefit of the Bryn Mawr Hospital.

Plans call for a gala Hollywood type opening including the personal appearance of many stars, including the personalities making a coast to coast bus tour on behalf of the film.

$1,000,000 To Sell "Say One"

NEW YORK—Following a home office rough-cut screening of 20th-Fox's "Say One For Me" last fortnight for company executives, Charles Einfeld, vice-president, said that it was decided to spend over $1,000,000 to launch the Frank Tashlin picture with the campaign to start six weeks prior to a June release.

Plans call for a national magazine campaign; the most extensive music promotion in 20th-Fox history; a TV trailer featuring Bing Crosby; a series of guest appearances by stars on national TV shows, etc.

Fox Launches 24 In C'Scope To Oct.

NEW YORK—Following a series of home office meetings between 20th-Fox president Spyros P. Skouras and executive production head Buddy Adler last week, it was announced that 24 CinemaScope productions will go before the cameras between now and October.

This record production schedule, according to Adler and Skouras, reaffirms 20th-Fox' faith in exhibition.

The productions announced to go before the CinemaScope cameras are:

APRIL—Elia Kazan's production of "Time and Tide"; David O. Selznick's production of F. Scott Fitzgerald's "Tender is the Night"; Charles Brackett's production of Terence Rattigan's "O Mistress Mine"; John Wayne in "The Alaskans"; and Jack Cummings' "Stage Door," featuring an all-star cast of young performers, directed by Frank Tashlin.

MAY—Jerry Wald's production of Rona Jaffe's best-seller, "The Best of Everything"; Walter Wanger's production of "Cleopatra"; Charles Brackett's spectacle, "Salambo"; Samuel Engel's "The Story of Ruth"; "Sink the Bismarck," based on the classic sea story; and Dick Powell's production of "Bachelor's Baby," starring Bing Crosby.

JUNE—Darryl F. Zanuck's "De Luxe Tour"; Charles Brackett's production of Jules Verne's "Journey to the Center of the Earth," starring Pat Boone; and Jerry Wald's production of Sheila Graham's best-seller, "Beloved Infidel."

JULY—Samuel Engel's production of "The King Must Die," directed by Henry Koster; Mark Robson's production of the current runaway best seller by John O'Hara, "From the Terrace," and Jerry Wald's production of the D. H. Lawrence classic, "Sons and Lovers."

AUGUST—Jack Cummings' production of the Cole Porter stage hit, "Can-Can," and Jerry Wald's production of Clifford Odets' "The Story on Page One."

SEPTEMBER—Jerry Wald's production of a Grace Metalious original story, "Tight White Collar," and James Michener's "The Jungle."

OCTOBER—Jerry Wald's sequel to the top boxoffice production, "Return to Peyton Place"; "John Brown's Body"; and Darryl F. Zanuck Productions' adaptation of William Faulkner's "Requiem for a Nun."

New Arizona Studios See Production Boom

PHOENIX, ARIZ.—The first major motion picture studio outside Hollywood, and the first one of any size to be constructed in a number of years, will be built in desert country about 25 miles north of Phoenix, Ariz., by Cinearizona. The firm, headed by Kallman R. Leonard, hopes to have part of the studio in operation by January, 1960.

Backers claim the enterprise will represent an investment of more than $1 million. It is hoped that construction can begin by June 1 with three of 12 proposed sound stages and other facilities ready for use by the following January.

Leonard has been associated with the motion picture and television industry for more than 20 years. He was with Columbia Studios for a number of years.

Financing is being done through J. A. Keilly and Associates, Phoenix brokers. Adequate backing has been obtained from businessmen in Arizona and elsewhere, it was reported. The architect firm, Bricker and Busby, Camelback, Ariz., have drawn plans and called bids.

The plant will include administrative offices, projection rooms, dressing rooms, a wardrobe building and a film editing chamber with film vaults. The outdoor sets will include a western street, Mexican village, small midwestern town, and a New England village. A motel-type structure with 60 units will be built to accommodate incoming crews and casts.

Plans call for the overall project to be completed in a year. The studios will be for rental only. The builders will not operate a producing company, Leonard said.

70 mm For Detroit House

DETROIT—Woodrow R. Praught, president of United Detroit Theatres Corporation, has announced that 70mm equipment will be installed at the Madison, with target date for completion of installation set for May 15.

Procured from National Theatre Supply Company, the order specifies Bauer-NTS Universal U-2 35/70 Projector, Simplex 2-Projector Sound, Ashcraft Super Cinex Arc Lamps, Walker Hi-Gain Screen and Mulone adjustable curved steel screen frame.

On completion the equipment will be demonstrated for film people in Detroit and out-of-town affiliates of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc.

UA Gross, Net Reach Eighth Straight New High

NEW YORK—For the eighth consecutive year, United Artists increased its annual gross revenues and net earnings, establishing a new record high in each category, it was announced last week by Robert S. Benjamin, chairman, and Arthur B. Krim, president.

Net earnings for 1958 climbed to $3,701,963 after provision for taxes, as compared to $3,262,466 in 1957, an increase of 13.47 per cent, while gross revenues reached $84,072,467 compared to $70,008,242 in 1957.

The 1958 earnings per share on total capital stock of 1,367,485 shares outstanding at year end were $2.71. The comparative earnings per share for 1957, adjusted to the number of shares outstanding at the close of 1958, were $2.39.

During 1958 the amount of six per cent convertible debentures was reduced through conversions from $8,365,100 to $6,343,000.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

AN UNUSUAL production-distribution group has come into being. Sir Michael Balcon, so long associated with Ealing Films, which in turn have been distributed by United Artists, Rank, MGM, and, most recently, AB Pathe, has rallied around him a number of independent British producers. Under the managing directorship of Maxwell Setton they will make and sell their own films.

Each team will invest in the venture. Further financial support comes from Kenneth and Gerald Shipman, with Alliance Film Studios, British Lion Films, Rank's Denham Laboratories, and Lloyd's Bank bringing the total capital available up to $2,800,000.

"This," Sir Michael said, "is our revolt against the accountants—the non-creative moguls who decide whether our creative ideas are good enough." Noble sentiments—but with the greatest respect one must add that several of the production teams involved in the plan to make about six features a year and who will sit in judgment on the subjects have no enviable record of commercial successes. No titles are yet available.

The films will be made at the Shepperton, Twickenham, and Beaconsfield studios and distributed physically through British Lion in the UK and Lion International world wide. It is intriguing to see that Rank's Denham Laboratories are involved. The deal will ensure work for the processing plant.

Meanwhile, the Associated British studios have hit peak production with an all time record of seven production ventures currently underway, thanks to the dividing of one of the big stages into two. Four features ("Tommy the Toreador," "The Scent of Danger," "School for Scoundrels," and "Naked Fury," a Butchers release) and three TV series are before the cameras.

TWENTIETH-FOX claimed the greatest gathering of legal talent for a social occasion ever at the premiere of "Compulsion." The legal fraternity apparently regard the Leopold-Loeb trial as a law court classic and the response from the Lord Chief Justice downwards and politicians was so great that there was not a seat left for starlets. . . . AB Pathe have now moved into the former RKO Radio Block. . . . The biggest surprise news of the week is the departure of Harry Norris from the Rank Organization in which he held the position of joint assistant managing director. Since he joined the group as a coordinating accountant in 1950, he has had a meteoric rise to fame. Kenneth Winckles will now be sole assistant managing director. Colan MacCarthy, who has done such a good job in South America, will head the overseas company, and general manager Fred L. Thomas will supervise domestic distribution.

ATLANTA

Mrs. Warren Lathe, sister of Mrs. Lenord Allen, who husband is publicity agent for Paramount Pictures, was killed in a automobile accident in Charlotte, N. C., recently. . . . Mr. and Mrs. R. D. L. Gordon has resigned as New England representative for Continental Distribution Company to set up his own distributing company, Ellis L. Gordon Films Co. He is remaining at his present quarters to handle foreign and exploitation pictures for the six New England states. His position as New England representative for Continental has been taken over by Stanton Davis, former branch manager for Rank Films. . . . It is expected that entertainment will be exempt from taxation under the limited 3% sales tax bill proposed by Governor Furcolo, now under consideration in the legislature. All food items are exempt under a blanket ruling so that exhibitors need not worry about sales of candy and popcorn or of food concessions in drive-in theatres. Bottled soft drinks are also free from taxation but cup drinks and those from dispensers are taxable. The public hearings are now under way on this mammoth sales tax structure which will last until mid-April when the bill will be sent to the House for approval or rejection. If passed, the bill will not be-

Horrors Of The Black Museum

MELODRAMA
95M

America International
(CinemaScope)
(Eastman Color)
(English-made)

ESTIMATE: Well-made horror entry.

CAST: Michael Gough, June Cunningham, Graham Curnow, Shirley Ann Field, Geoffrey Keen, Gerald Anderson, John Warwick, Beatrice Varley, Austin Trevor. Produced by Herman Cohen; directed by Arthur Crabtree.

STORY: Psychiatrist and hypnotist Emile Franchel in a prologue discusses the pros and cons of hypnotism prior to the actual story presentation, and he asks the audience to participate in several tests to help soften them for the horrors to come. The story concerns itself with London terrorized by a series of horrible murders which have Scotland Yard baffled. The police are needed by crime writer Michael Gough, who is actually behind the crimes, committing some and delegating others to his assistant, Graham Curnow, under the influence of hypnosis. The two men maintain a private horror museum with a display of murder and torture devices rivaling that of Scotland Yard. June Cunningham, secret girl friend of Gough, has a fight with him and is beheaded. Beatrice Varley, proprietress of an antique shop where Gough has bought many of his weapons, guesses that Gough is behind the killings and tries to blackmail him. He kills her as well. When his physician guesses that there must be a connection between the crimes and Gough, he, too, is murdered and his flesh is decomposed in a vat of acid. Curnow has been carrying on a secret romance with Shirley Ann Field, and when Gough catches him showing her the museum, he orders Curnow to kill her at a carnival. When he does, the crowd and police pursue him, cornering him atop the ferris wheel. He ties Gough in with the murders before being felled by a police bullet. He lands with his knife atop Gough, killing him as well. The reign of terror is now over.

X-RAY: This entry presents horror on a grand scale after a bit of hocus pocus about hypnotism which serves as an introduction to the actual yarn. Some of it is a bit too gruesome for the young or the tenderhearted, but for others who like their screen offerings bloody and sensational, this is it. Its effectiveness is heightened all the more by the use of color, which adds considerably to the horror. The story is well presented, with interest well maintained. Direction and production are good. It should go well as either part of the show, exploitation or otherwise. The screenplay is by Aben Kandel and Herman Cohen.

Hey Boy! Hey Girl!

MUSICAL
81M.

Columbia

ESTIMATE: Enjoyable romp for pop music fans.

CAST: Louis Prima, Keely Smith, James Gregory, Henry Slate, Kim Charney, Barbara Heller, Asa Maynor, Sam Butera and the Witnesses. Produced by Harry Romm; directed by David Lowell Rich.

STORY: Keely Smith and Priest James Gregory convince Louis Prima to play a benefit for their church to send kids off to summer camp. Prima is attracted to Smith and meets her young brother, Kim Charney. Smith joins his band as vocalist and is an immediate success. She and Prima are in love, but Charney is terribly jealous, missing his sister's attention. Prima, assisted by the members of his band, wins the youngster's approval by accompanying him on gruelling hikes and taking an interest in natural history. Prima undertakes to raise money to provide the underprivileged kids with a permanent camp and is successful. He and Smith are wed.

X-RAY: The story serves simply as a convenient peg on which to hang a string of enjoyable musical numbers. Prima and Smith are far removed from rock 'n' roll as we know it, and the difference is a fortunate one. Among the hottest night club personalities in the land, they put their musical talents to work with equal appeal on the screen. The musical numbers are well-staged and well-performed, and the Prima-Smith duo should prove an attraction with appeal to a larger segment of the population than the usual low-budget offering aimed at the teen market. The tunes have been published as sheet music and are available on long-playing records to provide another valuable promotional assist. Exhibitors should tie up with music stores and local disc jockeys, winning wide play for the listenable score. Written by Raphael Hayes and James West.

TIP ON BIDDING: Fair program rates.

It Happened to Jane

COMEDY
98M.

Columbia
(Eastman Color)

ESTIMATE: Highly entertaining comedy.

CAST: Doris Day, Jack Lemmon, Ernie Kovacs, Steve Forrest, Teddy Rooney, Russ Brown, Walter Greaza, Parker Fennelly, Mary Wickes, Philip Coolidge, Casey Adams, John Cecil Holm, Gina Gillespie, Dick Crockett. Executive producer, Martin Melcher; produced and directed by Richard Quine.

STORY: Pretty widow Doris Day supports her two children by gathering and selling lobsters. The negligence of the railroad owned by hard-boiled Ernie Kovacs causes a shipment to die. Determined to fight for her rights, Day sues and wins. Kovacs, angered, appeals to higher courts whereupon Day "attaches" the train that runs through her town. She is lionized by the press and becomes a national hero. She appears on TV shows and receives a proposal from handsome reporter Steve Forrest, much to the chagrin of long-time admirer, faithful but unexciting Jack Lemmon. Kovacs, switching tactics, makes her a present of the train but cuts off all service to her town, turning the townspeople against Day. She and Lemmon decide to use the train to make a lobster shipment. Vindictive Kovacs, forced to give them a routing, sends the old train on the most roundabout way possible. Public resentment grows against Kovacs and even his aides begin to desert. Realizing the value of public relations, Kovacs switches character and helps them deliver the lobster. Day realizes Lemmon is the guy for her and all ends happily.

X-RAY: This is a highly entertaining family comedy that should delight customers in all age groups. Kovacs, playing the meanest man in the world is an absolute delight, and Day and Lemmon supply their usual skillfully lighthearted portrayals. The story is treated much in the nature of a fairy tale with one happily improbable scene following another. Even the lobsters have personality. Those groups crying for more family-type entertainment should find this a perfect answer. Aided by good name draw and a seeming return of public acceptance to comedy, this should find a happy audience. There are a couple of songs. The screenplay is by Norman Katkov.

TIP ON BIDDING: Better rates.

AD LINES: "The Happiest Gal In The World Vs. The Meanest Man In The World"; "A Battle Guaranteed To Be The Year's Top Laugh Riot".

ESTIMATE: New faces spark western.

STORY: In 1848, California, recently acquired by the U.S. from Mexico, is a haven for dangerous criminals from other parts of the U.S. Gunman Dennis Hopper murders a wealthy young Mexican and is arrested by young sheriff Pat Wayne. The trial under Judge Dan O'Herlihy stirs considerable excitement. Never before has an American been tried for killing a Mexican. No matter which way the verdict goes, one side will be against it. Wayne is in love with Yvonne Craig, daughter of wealthy Mexican Roberto de la Madrid. Hopper is found guilty and sentenced to 25 years in jail. O'Herlihy tells him the sentence will be suspended if he promises never to touch firearms again. Hopper grabs a gun and flees the court room. Wayne goes out alone to capture him. Hopper is killed in a showdown battle. American justice has been tested and is proven fair. The Mexicans are satisfied with their new citizenship.

X-RAY: A host of new faces, many of them second generation personalities, add interest to this piece of Americana. The story holds interest fairly well with enough action to satisfy western fans. Performances, production, and direction are adequate, and exhibitors should strive for the younger audience by concentrating on the new faces provided. Another selling feature is a song by teen-age favorite Randy Sparks, "Strange Are The Ways of Love." The story treats an interesting segment of history and follows Whitney's plan to show Americana via the screen. Screenplay is by Norman Shannon Hall.

TIP ON BIDDING: Fair program rates.

AD LINES: "They Counted Their Age By Kisses . . . Or The Notches On Their Guns"; "The Troublemaker . . . The Lawmaker . . . Both Not Old Enough To Vote—Except With A Gun."

MGM
Technicolor

ESTIMATE: Okay programmer.

CAST: George Montgomery, Taina Elg, David Farrar, Rex Ingraham, Dan Seymour, Robert Goodwin, Anthony M. Davis, Paul Thompson, Harold Dyrenforth. Produced by Al Zimbalist. Directed by Kurt Neumann.

STORY: George Montgomery, son of a famous white hunter, arrives in Africa from England after World War I to retrace his father's steps to the diamond mines of King Solomon. At his father's old home, he finds friend David Farrar, who reluctantly agrees to accompany him. A few days out, they come across a missionary settlement under attack by natives and they rescue Taina Elg, daughter of the dead missionary. Montgomery's hate of Germans is revealed both before the trip gets under way and at Elg's rescue when he learns that she is also German. They are forced to take her along. Eventually a guide is sent out by the Watusi tribe to help them find the village. There both men realize that they are in love with Elg and Farrar even proposes, but gets no definite answer. They find that the regular entrance to the mine has been sealed and they are forced to go in by a hazardous route. They reach the jewel cache and take a small amount barely getting out before the way is destroyed. Montgomery and Elg decide to marry and remain with the Watusi for a while appreciating the peace and quiet, while Farrar returns to civilization.

X-RAY: Of average interest is this entry for the program which also contains adequate performances, okay direction and good production values. The footage has been cleverly integrated with film that was previously exposed in Africa and it is colorfully presented. There are enough thrills and action to satisfy the majority of viewers. The screenplay is by James Clavell based on the novel "King Solomon's Mines" by H. Rider Haggard.

WESTERN

Paramount

ESTIMATE: Western has angles.

CAST: Robert Taylor, Fess Parker, Tina Louise, Jack Lord, Shirley Harmer, Mickey Shaughnessy, Gene Evans. Produced by Frank Freeman, Jr. Directed by Michael Curtiz.

STORY: Deputy U.S. Marshal Robert Taylor arrives at a Cavalry fort seeking someone who can accompany him and identify the last remaining member of a gang that held up a Wells Fargo stage and killed some of its occupants. He is directed to widow Tina Louise, who works in the laundry and who was friendly with the ex-soldier. He offers her money to follow him to a town where the suspect is employed and to point him out. In town, he introduces himself to sheriff Fess Parker who promises him assistance if needed. When Taylor spots a teamster, Jack Lord, answering the general description of the wanted man, he has a feeling about him but he needs proof before making the arrest. He is impatient since time is working against him with the only witness who could testify against the wanted man due to hang shortly. Taylor also finds that the entire town is Lord's friend which makes it all the tougher. When Louise arrives, she does recognize Lord but refuses to betray him. When they meet, he tells her he was unknowingly involved in the hold-up to the extent of minding horses for several men. Lord and his pregnant wife Shirley Harner try to get away but are caught and Lord is jailed which sets the town against Taylor. Friend Mickey Shaughnessy breaks him out and though Taylor has the fleeing man in his sights he purposely misses having been impressed with Lord's story and the faith in him of those around him. Taylor resigns his job and heads for California accompanied by Louise.

X-RAY: This tale of a U.S. Marshal with a reputation on the trail of a lawbreaker is fairly interesting with the best selling points being the substantial cast that is offered headed by Robert Taylor. The acting is suitable and the direction and production are adequate. There is a sufficiency of action and intrigue to spark the interest of most viewers and the entry should do alright as part of the show. The screenplay is by Dudley Nichols based on a story by Luke Short.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Program rates.

The Last Train From Gun Hill (5821)

WESTERN
94M.

Paramount
(Technicolor)
(VistaVision)

ESTIMATE: Suspenseful, big scale western.

CAST: Kirk Douglas, Anthony Quinn, Carolyn Jones, Earl Holliman, Brad Dexter, Brian Hutton, Ziva Rodann. Produced by Hal B. Wallis; directed by John Sturges.

STORY: Pawley, Okla., marshal Kirk Douglas journeys to Gun Hill to find the attacker and slayer of his Indian wife, Ziva Rodann. He learns the man he is looking for is Earl Holliman, son of a former close friend, Anthony Quinn, now a tough and wealthy cattleman whom he hasn't seen in years. Douglas, despite the efforts of Quinn and his men, captures Holliman and holes up in a hotel room with him to wait for the last train out of town. Quinn's men surround the hotel, but in a showdown gun duel Douglas kills Quinn. Holliman is killed by the bullet of a friend who gave his own life trying to liberate him.

X-RAY: This is a sustained study in suspense with Douglas and Quinn, along with others, turning in top performances. The film has been given a sumptuous production for a western, and the color and VistaVision enhance things considerably. The first several reels concerned with the attack on Rodann are particularly effective and have been photographed beautifully. Carolyn Jones makes her moments count and delivers a fine performance in a difficult role. There is no romance to speak of. This has a screenplay by James Poe from a story by Les Crutchfield. There are several touches which make this adult film fare.

TIP ON BIDDING: Better rates.

AD LINES: "Nothing—But Nothing Could Stop This Lawman From Getting His Man!"; "Greatest Gun Duel The Screen Has Ever Seen."

(Mirisch-Jaguar)

ESTIMATE: Sell the Ladd name.

CAST: Alan Ladd, Carolyn Jones, Diane Brewster, John Lupton, Tom Helmore, Charles McGraw, others. A Walter Mirisch production; directed by Michael Curtiz.

STORY: Artist Alan Ladd moves to an old farm in a rural country-club community with his sophisticated wife, Carolyn Jones. He has a two-sided purpose — to cure his wife of alcoholism and tendencies of nymphomania, and to paint rural scenes. The Ladd's wealthy neighbors are hardly understanding of the artist in their midst, but accept them. Ladd makes friends with all the children. When he is framed and accused of Jones' murder, it is the children who rally to his help. Half-thinking they are playing games, they are instrumental in his hiding from a lynch mob in a cave and later, in clearing himself with the aid of a tape recording which incriminates the unsuspected murderer, the socialite father of weakling John Lupton, and his aide, local sheriff Charles McGraw.

X-RAY: This meller dealing with unpleasant subject matter offers a new angle in the mixing of innocent children who side with and assist a framed adult pal accused of a most sordid murder, the ramifications and motive for which they could not possibly comprehend at their ages no matter how precocious and sophisticated they might be. The components do not jell. Carolyn Jones turns in a realistic, albeit unpleasant and unsympathetic performance as the alcoholic, nymphomaniac wife; Ladd is a subdued, frightened "hero" for the most part, with the most action engaged in by him being a chase through the woods a hop, skip, and a jump ahead of a lynch mob; most of the children are pretty artificial. Production is satisfactory, but direction seems contrived. The rural settings are beautiful and the authentic atmosphere of a country gentleman country has been well preserved. The peculiar story is by Patrick Quentin and screenplay by Reginald Rose, and it is suspenseful in spots, sordid in others, but hardly thrilling or convincing. This is program fare with stressing the Ladd name the sales angle. Do not mistake the presence of the children in the film as a reason for trying to sell it to the kiddies. It is definitely not their type of movie.

TIP ON BIDDING: Program Rates.

UA
(Vogue)

ESTIMATE: For the lower half.

CAST: Jerome Thor, Marcia Henderson, Scott Marlowe, John Hoyt, Dick Tyler, Virginia Aldridge, Dorothy Provine. Produced by Robert E. Kent. Directed by Edward L. Cahn.

STORY: When several youngsters are shot attempting a breakout out of a juvenile prison, the public demands changes despite the dead youngsters being armed. The governor places psychiatrist Jerome Thor in charge of the institution over old warden John Hoyt. Thor makes the place co-ed by bringing in delinquent girls, which arouses opposition especially from matron Marcia Henderson. Scott Marlow, leading troublemaker, resists the efforts of Thor to help him. Most of the others are falling in with the program and things are going fairly smoothly until Marlowe's enemy Dick Tyler attacks his girl friend Virginia Aldridge. The furor causes the governor to remove Thor despite his being right, and Hoyt is once again placed in charge with his tough methods and brutal guards. Marlowe organizes a riot and holds hostages. The governor appeals to Thor for help and he returns with even Marlowe cooperative once again.

X-RAY: There is some action, intrigue as well as some different twists in what could have been a strictly standard prison story. The acting is fair as is the direction and production. The title could lend itself to exploitation in some situations but on the whole this is for the lower half. The screenplay is by Orville H. Hampton.

(English-made)

ESTIMATE: Interesting, suspenseful programmer.

CAST: Howard Keel, Anne Heywood, Cyril Cusack, Harry H. Corbett, John Crawford, Edie Nyrne, John Phillips, Mark Baker. Produced by Sydney Box; directed by Charles Crichton.

STORY: Rain storms and melting snows bring about flood devastation in the mid-west. A prison gang is pressed to help pile sand bags, but the rising waters destroy the barricade. In the confusion, a number of convicts escape. Among them are Howard Keel, imprisoned for a murder he claims he never committed, and vicious Cyril Cusack. Keel rescues Anne Heywood, as well as Cusack and a guard, Harry H. Corbett. Heywood is attracted to Keel, and the latter prevents Cusack from molesting her or killing Corbett. Corbett escapes when the opportunity presents itself. Keel tries to get the girl to high ground, telling her that he wasn't guilty of murder and that he intends to get the man who framed him, his ex-business partner, John Crawford. Heywood tries to prevent his doing real murder. Keel and Crawford have it out, but Keel can't kill him when he gets the chance. Keel is absolved of the murder and the future looks bright for him and Heywood.

X-RAY: A great deal of attention has been paid to casting, dialogue, and scenic surroundings, all of which when integrated with background library footage on real floods makes for a realistic film that might well have been shot in America instead of in England. Howard Keel, of course, is well known to audiences, and while the others are relatively unknown, they perform well and convincingly. The direction is good, and the production values are high in quality. The story holds interest on high throughout, and it should do okay as part of the program. The screenplay is by Charles Crichton based on a novel by John and Ward Hawkins.

TIP ON BIDDING: Program Price.

AD LINE: "They Defied Death Every Minute"; "High Adventure On The Crest Of A Flood."

ESTIMATE: Name-packed, interesting drama.

CAST: Rock Hudson, Jean Simmons, Dorothy McGuire, Claude Rains, Kent Smith, Anna Lee, Ken Scott, Cindy Robbins, Augusta Merighi, Francis Bethencourt, Stacy Graham, Peter Chong. Executive producer, Edward Muhl; produced by Casey Robinson and Claude Heilman; directed by Henry King.

STORY: Grandfather Claude Rains owns one of the largest vineyards in California near the end of the prohibition era. A grand-daughter, Jean Simmons, arrives from England, and as is his custom, Rains arranges an engagement between her and Francis Bethencourt, owner of a large vineyard. It turns out that she is the victim of an unhappy love affair on the continent. She is acquainted with her situation by Rock Hudson, family rebel, and illegitimate son of Kent Smith, who is married to Rains' eldest daughter, Dorothy McGuire. The latter runs the place and is bitter about Hudson not being her son. His mother is crippled Anna Lee. Rains has refused to sell his grapes to gangsters, and his fortune is shrinking all the time. Hudson decides to make a deal with the gangsters, and before he leaves for the east, he hears Simmons admit that she loves him. Gangsters force reluctant growers to fall in with Hudson's scheme. Meanwhile, Cindy Robbins and her father inform Rains that she is pregnant because of Hudson. They pay them some money to keep it quiet while McGuire arranges a marriage between her and her boy friend, Ken Scott. Hudson returns considerably richer only to find that Simmons has turned against him because of the baby incident, which he denies. He and Scott have a fight and a bullet and auto accident paralyze Hudson. Rains dies as prohibition is repealed, and his will breaks the empire, leaving little to McGuire. Hudson gets a vineyard as does Simmons. Though still crippled, he works his land and is joined by Simmons, who brings him cuttings from the valley vineyards.

X-RAY: Interesting for the most part is this tale of people who helped settle and develop a part of America. Their lives, their emotional highs and lows, their romances, and their methods of living are exposed and evaluated. What emerges is a story with many variations in theme and plot. Lengthy in the telling, it might have been improved with a bit of judicious editing. However, there's a bit of everything for everyone, including action, excitement, drama, and even a look-see into the making of wine and the growing of grapes. A competent, name-studded cast brings the characters to life, while good direction and production also add lustre. The cast has sufficient "lure value" to arouse the interest of potential viewers, and a solid campaign should help bring them in. The screenplay is by Casey Robinson based on the novel, "The Cup And The Sword," by Alice Tisdale Hobart. There is a title song sung by Don Cornell.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Higher rates in many situations.

South Pacific island inhabited by atomic scientist Alan Napier and his three lovely daughters, Venetia Stevenson, June Blair and Diane Jergens. Napier has forsaken the world which he thought headed for destruction to live out his days on the island. The girls are pleased to see the men while Napier is displeased. Stevenson falls in love with Richards while Blair falls for Smith. When the men refuse to give Napier their word that they will not reveal his whereabouts, he destroys their plane. They plan on building a raft and the girls pitch in to help. An accident in Napier's labs sets off an explosion similar to an atom bomb with the six safe behind huge boulders. The blast is recorded and a rescue plane arrives from Australia. Civilization doesn't look so bad to all of them.

X-RAY: A bit of a different story is to be found here and, perhaps, with more action and greater development of the yarn, it could have turned out slightly better. As it is, the plot is slowed with a maximum of conversation. The acting, direction and production are okay. It will fit on the lower half of the program. The screenplay is by Ray Buffum based on a story by Prescott Chaplin.

AD LINES: "Romance And Atomic Adventure In The South Seas"; "A Most Unusual And Atomic Thriller."

ESTIMATE: Okay entry for foreign spots.

CAST: Maria Schell, Raf Vallone, Kathe Gold, Leopold Biberti, Hannes Messemer, Arthur Wiesner, Christa Keller, Siegfried Lowitz. Produced by Hans Abich, directed by Wolfgang Staudte.

STORY: Maria Schell works on the manor farm of Leopold Biberti and is liked by all, proving almost indispensable to his paralyzed wife, Kathe Gold. Schell is desired by Raf Vallone, a muscular machine operator. She is also wanted by Biberti, to whom she surrenders one night. Another who desires Schell is a timid printer, Hannes Messemer, whom her father, Arthur Wiesner, favors. Complications arise when Schell discovers she is to have Biberti's child. Meanwhile, Vallone has seen the pair together and demands she submit to him as well. She tries to offer him money to no avail, and he eventually assaults her. She decides to marry Messemer to give the child a name. Vallone makes insinuations about her conduct, and when Messemer goes to her defense, Vallone causes the loss of an eye. The father files a slander suit against Vallone, and Schell perjures herself. The truth will out, and she is summoned to court. Enroute on the train, her labor pains commence, and she leaves to have the child alone in a culvert. The baby dies. Only one hope remains, that Messemer will accept her for what she is and start life all over again.

X-RAY: Maria Schell is irritatingly real in this drama of a simple girl who has an attraction for a number of men, each of whom has a different reason for desiring her. The story is on the heavy side, presenting the full dramatic treatment and milking the situations for all they're worth. The cast is good, as are the direction and production. Naturally, its reception is limited to the art spots or where German language films are readily accepted. The color is effective. The screenplay is by Walter Ulbricht, based on the play by Gerhart Hauptmann.

ACTUAL PROMOTIONS, accomplished by Experienced Theatremen, that can be applied with profit to many other Theatre Situations.

This special section is published every-second-week as a separately bound saveable service to all theatre executive subscribers to MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR. B. KIDS' MATINEES

NUMBER 29

Children's Safety Program

THEATRE: O'Brien

ADDRESS: Renfrew, Ontario, Canada

MANAGER: D. J. Fevreau

In our 660 seat house in this town of 8,500 population we have found a little fella called "Elmer, The Safety Elephant" to be a wonderful booster for our children's matinees.

"Elmer" is a symbol of child safety who was dreamed up by Bas Mason of the Toronto Telegram 12 years ago. This happy little pachyderm is extremely popular in Ontario and elsewhere, and we decided he was needed in our town.

I approached the local Junior Chamber of Commerce Traffic Safety Committee and asked if they would take on "Elmer" as one of their projects. Their response was so enthusiastic that other projects were temporarily put aside so that 100% of their attention could be focused on "Elmer". The Jaycees brought up a speaker from the Ontario Safety League to address a gathering at a banquet given for the official kick-off on the campaign. All leading dignitaries, police, school and religious authorities were present and gave wholehearted support to the project. The Jaycees and myself then visited all the schools in town, explaining all about "Elmer". Each school was given an "Elmer" flag and one and all were advised of the forthcoming "Elmer Theatre Parties." The date for the start of the parties was set and the Jaycees once again visited the schools announcing the opening date. We received full co-operation from both our weekly newspapers in the form of "Elmer" editorials, photos and write-ups.

The theatre parties are a series of 10 matinees held on consecutive Saturday mornings at 10 a.m. At every matinee each child receives some item of candy free all donated for the advertising benefits received by the different candy companies. At the first matinee the child receives a membership card to the "Elmer" Club. Every time the child attends, he has his card punched to keep track of the number of times he has attended. After attending six times, he gets an "Elmer" crest, given by the Jaycees. A child with perfect attendance is allowed to put his card into a drum for a drawing of the grand prize. At each matinee, a member of the Jaycees and a representative of the police department give a talk on safety and a contest is held amongst the children. We've had a pie-eating contest, doll contest, model contest, balloon-blowing contest, and others. This helps to keep the children's enthusiasm at a peak. A prize is given every week by the Jaycees to the contest winner; but before the child can accept the prize, he must recite the six "Elmer" safety rules letter-perfect from memory. On the 10th Saturday, all the cards with perfect attendance are put into a drum and six names are drawn. The first five receive prizes donated by the Jaycees and the sixth name drawn is the winner of a bicycle donated by the theatre. All must recite the safety rules.

We have just finished with a complete series of these Children's Theatre Parties and the response has been so good that the Jaycees now plan to run another series in the fall with the hopes of making it a twice yearly effort continually.

The only cost to the theatre was the bicycle and signs, plus some effort.

"Elmer" is copyrighted, so permission must be received from The Toronto Telegram or the Ontario Safety League to use him, but for a sure-fire way to boost kid matinee business, promote good-will and save children's lives, "Elmer" is the boy!

EXPLOITATION—an encyclopedia of useable exploitation stunts—is published every other week as a section of Motion Picture Exhibitor.

Newspaper Cooperation Always Helps

THEATRE: Dakota

ADDRESS: Sturgis, S. D.

MANAGER: Mert Martin

As the result of a recent long talk between myself and Morris G. Hallock, publisher, Sturgis Tribune, I obtained the following editorial in the newspaper:

CREDIT TO COMMUNITY

As relative newcomers to the community, we have been impressed with the fine theatre located in Sturgis. It is one of the best in the entire state and it is a distinct credit to the community.

The Dakota Theatre has a good product—movies that are getting better than ever as the film industry faces up to the challenge of television—and a good physical plant. It provides wholesome entertainment with a wide variety of films for movie-goers of all ages, and it attracts many visitors into town from throughout the trade territory.

Movies tend to keep youngsters off the streets at night and out of trouble. They are an effective curb to juvenile delinquency as few parents have to worry about their children while they are at the movies. Nobody would like every movie, but the schedule of films at the Dakota Theatre includes something for every member of the family.

Frankly, we don't know of anything that is more enjoyable than a night at the movies with the family. It is nice to get away from the house once in a while, and the Dakota Theatre is a good place to spend that evening out.

I explained our position as the only theatre in town; and what it would mean to the town if we were forced to close.

This is a good example of the extent to History repeated itself recently when the world's largest reproduction of Goya's "The Naked Maja" was draped on the block long spectacular over the Astor and Victoria, Times Square, New York City. Word has reached United Artists, creators of the sign plugging the film, that the vast nude was too startling, even for blase New Yorkers. It was over 150 years ago that Goya first ran into difficulties over his world-famed nude.

which some newspapers will go to keep a town from losing their theatre.

Local Gal Makes Good Angle

THEATRE: SW De Witt

ADDRESS: Bayonne, N. J.

MANAGER: Nyman Kessler

Since community pride means so much in practically every city and town, I commercialized on that fact as Bayonne-Born Sandra Dee had a starring role in U-I's "The Restless Years"; and I am still enthused over the wonderful cooperation I received from 14 local merchants and the local newspaper, The Bayonne Times.

The publicity department of U-I also co-operated with me in giving us 1,000 stills 5x7 of Miss Dee, which we distributed two weeks before playing the picture.

In conjunction with our showing of this picture we held a contest which was city-wide and wherein we offered three gorgeous ward-robos for the three best essays of about 200 words on "The Challenge Of Being A Teen-ager Today." The two local high schools were most cooperative in announcing this to their pupils. The English Departments of these schools also acted as judges in selecting the three best essays submitted as well as the 10 runners-up.

Since practically everyone in Bayonne knew or heard of Sandra Dee being born here with many residents knowing her family before they left for Hollywood, all the merchants were happy to offer gifts as prizes. I had ballot boxes put in every one of the 14 cooperating merchants' stores where each teen-ager deposited her essay and received a free photograph of Miss Dee. In that way, the merchants had people coming in to their stores. The merchants were flooded with requests from many of their customers for photos. That, of course, helped publicize her and her picture until "The Restless Years" was a by-word of conversation everywhere one went. It snowballed in popularity each day.

The local newspaper went all out due to the local angle; and on two different days gave us big full column stories and reminders of the essay contest.

The publicity department of Universal also got me various scene and star stills of Sandra Dee, which I had enlarged for a display in our front lobby two weeks before play dates. On this enlargement I had stories by Louella Parsons about Bayonne's Sandra Dee, plus other newspaper stories about her. I also had another 40x60 display listing the various names of the 14 merchants donating the prizes and also reminding teen-agers to enter the contest.

The Bayonne Times liked the idea of this contest so much as it tied in with their weekly page on the doings here by the various schools and community groups dealing with the youth of this city that they gave us hundreds of lines of free publicity.

Naturally, the teen-agers in school knew about the contest as well as their parents, who no doubt cooperated with them, because we got some very excellent essays. Public spirit, cooperation and teamwork made an ordinary program picture into a terrific hit at our box-office.

The first prize winner received five beautiful gifts, a new spring suit, a pair of shoes, a new spring hat, a leather handbag, plus a Kodak star-flash camera kit. The second winner also received five gifts, a dress, a monogrammed tycora sweater, a pair of slacks, two long playing albums of their choice, plus a Chantilly set of perfume. The third prize winner got four prizes, a coordinate skirt and blouse outfit, a lounging pajama outfit, a mohair wool cardigan, and candy.

The parents of the winners came in to see me and thank me for the wonderful prizes their daughters won. We made lots of friends for the theatre with this outstanding essay contest tied in with the local angle on a home town girl making good.

A Birthday Cake Tieup

THEATRE: Strand

ADDRESS: Scranton, Pa.

MANAGER: John G. Corbett

We recently effected a most successful tieup with the largest bakery in town, on a birthday cake give-away.

In each store are large signs listing our current attractions. With each birthday cake order received the clerk gives a birthday card including a pass to our theatre. The cards read: "Baked up this tasty birthday wish . . . Please accept this guest ticket to the Strand Theatre as our way of expressing sincere wishes for a Happy Birthday. Seckary's Bakery."

At the end of the week, for all passes received from this medium we are reimbursed at the afternoon admission price.

To start the activity off with a bang the store ran a three-column ad in the local newspaper explaining the birthday cake deal.

A Perfect Furlough Stunt

THEATRE: Granada

ADDRESS: Reno, Nevada

MANAGER: Val Dage

One of the finest promotions we have ever had was on U-I's "The Perfect Furlough" which had its Nevada premiere at our theatre.

In cooperation with local business men and the U.S. Army Recruiting Service, Sacramento, Cal., this was designated as in honor of S.F.C. Frank Hinojosa, who won the contest for being the outstanding Army recruiter for Nevada and California.

Opening night was to a packed house. We had a 30 minute live broadcast over radio station KATO from in front of the theatre with the Stewart Indian School band from Stewart, Nevada; over 60 of the top Army officials in the area; plus representatives from the vari-

THE NEW 1959 "Showman-of-the-Year" CONTEST

Each individual achievement, selected by the Editorial Board and published in this every-second-week EXPLOITATION Section of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, will receive an Achievement Citation. Five by the same showman published in any one year will receive a SILVER Achievement Citation. And, should any showman ever accomplish ten in the same year, a GOLD Achievement Citation will be awarded. No weekly or monthly prizes will accompany such citations.

At each year's end, all such published achievements will be submitted to the "COMMITTEE OF 100" theatre circuit executives for their individual study and their personal choice of the BEST FIVE. A minimum of

will be awarded to the five "SHOWMEN-OF-THE-YEAR" so selected. Alert showmen, interested in the international distinction to be gained from such awards, will recognize that an advantage lies in winning repeated individual published achievements. Address all submissions and photographs to: GEORGE F. NONAMAKER, Feature Editor, MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR, 246-48 N. Clarion Street, Philadelphia 7, Penna.

High school editors had a field day recently in New York when Kim Novak was the target for questions and cameras at a special press conference in the Columbia home office.

ous businesses, who made the presentation of gifts to Sergeant Hinojosa and his wife. Mayor Len Harris, of Reno, presented the Sergeant with the gold key to our city.

"The Perfect Furlough" was assured by at least 14 merchants including hotels and Western Air Lines, who flew the Sergeant and his wife in. They were met at the airport by Army officials and myself. They were shown a grand time including hotel accommodations, a cocktail party, fishing gear, dinners, presents, etc.

The fact was that the entire promotion cost the theatre less than $10, as the expenses were taken care of by the merchants. A very tight schedule was maintained, including a visit to Virginia City, home of the Comstock Lode.

Perhaps, with the proper tieups, this promotion might be emulated by other theatre managers and used to good advantage.

A Theatre Comes of Age

THEATRE: Ritz
ADDRESS: Keighley, Yorks, England
MANAGER: Peter H. Gaston

It is literally only once in a lifetime that a theatre reaches its coming of age, and it afforded us the ideal opportunity to go all out in a local effort of public relations and goodwill.

Our effort commenced some four weeks prior to the event with teaser stickers placed in prominent positions around the theatre all featuring the figure "21" prominently. Public address announcements were made during intervals and recordings from MGM's "Tom Thumb", the feature film for anniversary week, played as background music.

New Trailer Strips Available From Filmack

NEW YORK—In response to exhibitors' complaints that the old trailer strips reading "Also," "Plus," and "And" are outmoded, Filmack Trailer Company has produced a new group of second feature and short subject trailer strips.

The new strips are attractively illustrated, available either in color or black and white, and may be obtained in a complete set of five or separately.

Each strip is headed "And on the same program," and the separate strips read: "A Rollicking Cartoon Hit"; "A Thrilling Mystery Hit"; "A Picture The Whole Family Will Enjoy"; "A Thrilling Epic Of The Old West", etc.

I'm the Happiest Man in Town!

Fox Midwest Theatres had considerable success with their "Happiest Men In Town" campaign. The above is a reproduction of one of the newspaper ads that helped put it over. It could be adapted for practically all situations on either similar or smaller scale.

Fox Midwest Theatre's recent "Happiest Man In Town" campaign proved quite successful.

Here is how to set the stage for a similar campaign:

FIRST is the personal attitude of you, the manager. Be optimistic and enthusiastic about the great new pictures coming to your theatre. Let your happiness be contagious—spread it wherever you go.

SECOND is the physical aspect of your theatre. Give your theatre a thorough house-cleaning—make it inviting, immaculate looking, sparkling clean, refreshing. Make your patrons feel comfortable and relaxed. Remember you are competing with lovely homes —make your theatre just as nice from the standpoint of comfort, coziness, and cleanliness.

THIRD is your theatre personnel. A courteous, friendly staff of ushers, doormen and cashiers are important. Imbue in every employee the same enthusiasm, the same optimism and the same spirit that you have generated because of all the great things coming to your theatre. An enthused, pepped-up bunch of employees can start a word-of-mouth campaign that's bound to result in a gratifying reaction at the boxoffice. Remember, you are catering to the most important persons in the world—your patrons!

FOURTH is civic contact. Enlist the co-operation of the newspapers; the radio; the television. Tell them what you're planning; the additional space and time and sundry other things designed to excite interest in your theatre, etc. Tell the Chamber of Commerce all about it, particularly the Retail Trade Committee. The calibre of big shows you will be playing brings big crowds to town. Merchants benefit, too. Remember, retail stores make their plans early—so take your plans to them early! Give them press releases. Arrange lobby displays on coming hits. Tie in with the merchants, etc.

TRAILERS with appropriate background that ties in with your ads and other materials are bound to get results. A sample six frame trailer might read:

- #1 I'M THE HAPPIEST MAN IN TOWN!
 - #2 Because I'm going to make YOU HAPPY . . .
 - #3 With all these Great Motion Picture Productions That are part of our Coming Hit Parade
 - 4 (insert trailerettes)
 - #5 THEY'RE ALL COMING HERE REAL SOON!
 - #6 REMEMBER . . . Any Day's A Holiday When You Take The Family OUT To A Theatre.
- And you remember, An Exhibitor SHOWS motion pictures; a Showman SELLS motion pictures!

WARNERS has set a transcontinental star parade which will take a group of Hollywood personalities through the heart of America by Greyhound Motor Bus to Philadelphia to attend the world premier of "The Young Philadelphians" May 19 at a Stanley Warner theatre there. The 3,475-mile "glamour parade" will cover 34 major cities and more than 200 important towns, with overnight stops scheduled in 12 key population centers. A continuing round of events will be featured. The scheduled route calls for overnight stops in Phoenix, El Paso, Abilene, Dallas, Tulsa, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Baltimore. Important intermediate stops include Indio, Cal.; Tucson, Ariz.; Lordsburg, N.M.; Pecos, Big Springs and Fort Worth, Texas; Ardmore and Oklahoma City, Okla.; Fort Scott, Kansas; Columbia, Mo.; Springfield and Bloomington, Ill.; South Bend and Elkhart, Ind.; Toledo, Akron and Canton, Ohio; and Harrisburg, Pa. It is expected that over 50 million people along the route will be introduced to the players through press, TV, radio, and personal appearances.

UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL is continuing to maintain its promotional barrage in support of "Imitation Of Life" through the use of personalities in support of new openings. Douglas Sirk, the director of the film, and Robert Alda, who has one of the featured roles, are the latest personalities to join in the campaign. Authoress Fannie Hurst, Susan Kohner and Dan O'Herlihy are others who figured importantly in the promotional activity.

20TH CENTURY-FOX likewise joined the policy of sending star performers throughout the country to aid exhibitors in pre-selling films and sent Dolores Michaels, feminine star of "Warlock", to make the most extensive single-area tour in the history of the company. She visited more than 50 cities throughout the Kansas City area, where she met the press, radio and TV representatives, attended various functions held in her honor, and aided in pre-selling the picture throughout the area. Born and raised in Kansas City, Miss Michaels' familiarity with the area and with opinion makers was expected to prove an invaluable aid to the promotion.

COLUMBIA has planned a diversified promotional program to sell "It Happened To Jane" to the public. Of special interest to exhibitors, is a seven-trailer package, the most complete ever offered to theatres. Among the more important promotions is a personal appearance tour by Doris Day; a cross-promotion with Columbia Records; a giant radio campaign; a special 16mm featurette for television; and national merchandising tie-ins.

MGM, in addition to magazine, newspaper, radio and television campaigns on "Green Mansions" has set tieups with Bantam Books on their current edition of the story; and with MGM Records which has just issued a Leroy Holmes single of the "Song Of Green Mansions" with copies being rushed to disc jockeys.

pounds, eight and one half ounces. It was furnished by a cooperating baker.

Each night of the anniversary week patrons who had received "Lucky 21st keys" were invited to participate in a stage presentation in which they were given a chance to win a selection of over 300 items which had been promoted locally and nationally at absolutely no cost to the theatre.

On the Saturday night we had guests of honor including the Mayor and Mayoress of the community. The Mayor himself opened the sealed envelope containing the correct weight of the cake and we announced the name of the winner.

To commemorate our anniversary we put out a 24 page plus cover souvenir program. This was crammed full of merchant ads, institutional anniversary copy, greetings from the Mayor and other prominent citizens, data on the anniversary film attraction, a "meet the staff" feature cleverly and briefly introducing the house staff from "housekeepers" to projectionists, coming attractions, etc. We published 1500 of the attractive booklets at absolutely no cost to the theatre. Not only that, but when the accounts were finalized we were able to donate a small check to charity, this being the residue from the advertising receipts.

Another timely feature of our celebration was the "firing" of 21 rockets from the theatre roof at a specified time. Attached to each was a special "Tom Thumb" emblem which entitled the person returning it a special prize.

Press support for the event was excellent, and we know we attracted a lot of good will to the theatre which is bound to resound to our benefit in the days to come.

FOR OUR COMPANY.

THE FAMOUS PLAYWRIGHT CLIFFORD ODETS HAS WRITTEN THE STORY ON PAGE ONE, A TREMENDOUS MELODRAMA STARRING SUSAN HAYWARD.

FOR NEARLY A YEAR THE KING MUST DIE HAS BEEN ON BEST-SELLER LISTS EVERYWHERE. SAM ENGEL WILL PRODUCE THE MOTION PICTURE VERSION OF THIS EXCITING STORY. ALSO ON SAM ENGEL'S PRODUCTION SCHEDULE TO START SHOOTING SHORTLY IS THE GREAT BIBLICAL DRAMA TITLED THE SONG OF RUTH.

COLE PORTER'S CAN-CAN WILL GO BEFORE THE CAMERAS IN TODD-AO. TWO IMPORTANT BEST-SELLERS WILL ALSO GO BEFORE THE CAMERAS THIS SUMMER- JOHN O'HARA'S CONTROVERSIAL BEST SELLER, FROM THE TERRACE, TO BE PRODUCED AND DIRECTED BY MARK ROBSON AND SHEILAH GRAHAM'S GREAT LOVE STORY BELOVED INFIDEL TO BE PRODUCED BY JERRY WALD.

FURTHERMORE THE AUTHOR OF SOUTH PACIFIC, JAMES MICHENER, HAS GIVEN US THE JUNGLE, WHICH IS ALSO SCHEDULED FOR PRODUCTION THIS FALL.

NORMAN KRASNA, FAMOUS FOR SCREEN COMEDIES, HAS WRITTEN THE BILLIONAIRE, A HILARIOUS STORY TO BE PRODUCED BY JERRY WALD.

AND TO TOP IT OFF THE AUTHOR OF BELVEDERE HAS WRITTEN BACHELOR'S BABY. DICK POWELL WILL DIRECT AND PRODUCE THIS SUMMER STARRING BING CROSBY

ONE OF THE GREAT CLASSICS OF ALL TIME IS SONS AND LOVERS, A TITLE THAT WILL EXCITE MILLIONS. THIS PICTURE IS SCHEDULED FOR PRODUCTION THIS SUMMER.

TO BE PRODUCED BY JOHN BRABOURNE IS SINK THE BISMARCK, AN EXCITING SEA STORY THAT CHANGED HISTORY.

FOR FALL PRODUCTION WILL BE DARRYL F. ZANUCK'S REQUIEM FOR A NUN, A SHOCKER IN THE ZANUCK TRADITION.

I PREDICT THAT THE TITLE BIG RIVER, BIG MAN WILL BE AS WELL KNOWN TO YOU NEXT FALL WHEN THE BOOK IS PUBLISHED AS ANY OF THE TITLES I HAVE JUST MENTIONED. BY THAT TIME IT WILL BE IN PRODUCTION AS A MOTION PICTURE TO CAPITALIZE ON THE SUCCESS OF THE BOOK.

I COULD STOP HERE AND STATE UNEQUIVOCALLY THAT NO COMPANY CAN BOAST THIS NUMBER OF SUBJECTS TO BE PRODUCED WITHIN THE NEXT TWELVE MONTHS. THIS COMPANY BELIEVES IN TOMORROW HOWEVER. WE ARE PLANNING FAR BEYOND THE NEXT TWELVE MONTHS AND ON A BLOCKBUSTER BASIS. FOR EXAMPLE I HAVE ALREADY BEGUN PREPARATION TO PRODUCE PERSONALLY THE GREATEST CLASSIC OF THE CIVIL WAR, STEPHEN VINCENT BENET'S JOHN BROWN'S BODY. AS YOU KNOW THE CIVIL WAR WILL HAVE A TREMENDOUS REVIVAL IN PUBLIC INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD NEXT YEAR ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 100TH ANNIVERSARY.

FINALLY, WHAT COULD BE MORE EXCITING THAN GEORGE STEVENS' PRODUCTION OF THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD, IN TODD AO, WHICH MIGHT WELL BECOME THE GREATEST PICTURE EVER MADE AND ON WHICH MR. STEVENS WILL COMMENCE PREPARATION IMMEDIATELY.

YOU HAVE HEARD A LINEUP WHICH SOUNDS MORE LIKE A DREAM THAN A REALITY BUT I ASSURE YOU IT IS MORE A REALITY THAN A DREAM. INTO THESE PRODUCTIONS WE ARE POURING ALL OUR RESOURCES--MATERIAL, PHYSICAL AND CREATIVE.

THIS MIGHT BE THE APPROPRIATE TIME, SPYROS, TO LET THE BOYS IN THE FIELD KNOW THE WONDERFUL JOB THE STUDIO IS DOING IN INTRODUCING NEW PERSONALITIES. TO ME THIS IS ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT OBJECTIVES OUR COMPANY HAS, AND WAYS AND MEANS SHOULD BE FOUND TO SEE THAT ALL OUR EXCHANGES AND PERSONNEL ARE CONSCIOUS OF THESE NEW PERSONALITIES.

I WANT TO THANK ALL MY ASSOCIATES IN THE SALES ORGANIZATION AND THE EXHIBITORS OF THE WORLD. AND TO YOU, SPYROS, I PLEDGE, ON BEHALF OF THE STUDIO TEAM, CONTINUED DEDICATION TO THE TASK OF CREATING GREAT BOXOFFICE ATTRACTIONS.

SOME DISTRIBUTION BENEFITS IN SLIDING SCALE

A CIRCUIT FRIEND, from down Texas way, has sent in a rather interesting observation on SLIDING SCALE selling that hadn't occurred to us when the April 15 survey was being prepared. It is his feeling that the producer-distributor benefits, through the establishment of a larger and more consistent group of regular accounts, who will play everything—good, bad, and indifferent—in order to justify and to maintain their SLIDING SCALE formula.

But, we'll let him tell it!

"In non-bidding situations, and most particularly in the small town and neighborhood spots where a lot of product is used, it is much easier to put a picture in 'on scale' than to bicker and haggle about whether the 'flat' should be $75 or $100, or whether the percentage should be 30 per cent or 35 per cent. Besides that, there are few theatremen who wouldn't be willing to pay what a picture earns, rather than to try to outguess some exchangeman on what it may do a couple of weeks hence. Any sucker must realize that the exchangeman has better performance records on his pictures than the theatremen will ever get.

"So, with 10 dates to book, and with five pictures available 'on scale,' those five are going to be booked first and may even get the best playing time. Then the others will be haggled over, and at least some will be passed up.

"With two pictures of the same general type, cast strength and story value, the one sold 'on scale' is pretty certain to play several thousand more theatres than the one on which they ask a higher percentage than it is worth. Laziness, or an unwillingness to bicker and haggle, works for the 'on scale' picture. Because SLIDING SCALE lets each picture set its own selling price, there is a lot less sales effort, and a much smaller sales force and sales expense can move a lot more pictures. Selling becomes a matter of getting dates. The pattern of the sale, from one picture to another, is already set for the year in advance. It's a wonder friend Spyros, and other distributors with a volume policy, don't see that!"

We hadn't seen it, either. Possibly because we were too occupied with the theatre side of SLIDING SCALE.

But, we just wonder what would happen if a Fox, or a United Artists, or a Columbia, or a Metro, all of whom have a sizeable number of pictures coming, were to say to their customers: "Submit to a Price-Waterhouse audit, and come to us with clean hands, and our product will be available to you 'on scale.' Don't submit to an audit of your overhead, and don't furnish us with the reliable knowledge that is necessary to 'scale', and you force us to limit you to straight percentages. We'll even pay for the annual overhead audit. It's as simple as that!"

We would like to predict that the fellows with the "kited" overheads, who have been bluffing their way through, in some cases for years, won't like it. But, if enough of the honest men who have been getting hurt should sign up for "scale," even the bluffers will capitulate. Nobody will shoot craps with straight percentages, when he knows that competitive theatres are on 'scale'.

And we do mean nobody!

CENSORSHIP IN CHICAGO. . . AT $119,000 PER YEAR

"SIX MIDDLE-AGED WOMEN—five of them grandmothers—pass judgment on every motion picture shown in Chicago. If they don't like it, you don't see it." This was the start of a two-part survey by staff-writer Robert Gruenberg in the Chicago Daily News of April 7 and 8. And from this start, Mr. Gruenberg developed as enlightening a piece on the political implications of modern police censorship as we have ever read.

Some of the facts he cites are as follows: All six are widows of minor Chicago politicians of past years. All six receive a tidy $4,380 a year. In addition to the six there are 16 other political jobs, from policewomen, policemen, civilian investigators, to projectionists, regularly charged against the censoring operation. There are also offices and a little theatre at 320 N. Clark Street, and the customary yeasty politician's annual budget, that grew from $50,000 four years ago, to $70,000 two years ago, and to $119,000 for the current 1959.

How, or where, they got them we don't know, but it seems that in 1958 they viewed 858 pictures, including 263 foreign ones, and collected $52,290 in permit fees.

Further studying the "six middle-aged women," Mr. Gruenberg developed that the oldest is 67, the youngest-by-far is 43, and the average age is 56. The nearest to a college degree, or any special training in literature or in the arts, was one who "attended Chicago Normal College for 15 months."

These are the people, and these are their qualifications to decide what the inhabitants of the second largest city in the U.S.A. can, or can not, see in the moviehouses of their choice. And for such people, and for their decisions, Chicago has appropriated $119,000 during the current year. Space does not permit the intimate details of the place at "the public trough" that had been occupied by the dead husbands and the alderman brothers. Nor does it permit the reprinting of the naive and often "little girl" speeches of the "six." But it is all there in Mr. Gruenberg's survey.

Alert theatremen should add the data in this survey to their permanent files. And the next time someone threatens local censorship they should trot it out. It is pretty much a blueprint of what police or political censorship will become—even though it may start out with the best of intentions.

Censorship benefits more than morals!

HIT OR MISS

COMMENTING on the "feast-or-famine" film selling of today, Herbert Kohn of the Malco Theatre Circuit, on a recent visit from Memphis, described film salesmen as coming in "either with a sledge hammer or with their hat in their hands."

The only trouble is, even the "hat" costs 50 percent nowadays!

As you probably know, I am here on the MGM lot, so it gave me an opportunity to show them around and to have lunch with them. In visiting the sets, the attached photo was taken where another Philadelphian, Al

Again From Virginia

We see from the April 23 Bulletin issued by the Virginia Motion Picture Theatre Association the following reference:

"We were very glad to see the April 15 issue of MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR carried a re-edited reprint of their series THE 'SLIDING SCALE METHOD of arriving at A FAIR FILM PRICING FORMULA.' If you do not have this, and wish to read it, please let me know, because we believe it will come up for discussion at the Convention in July."

Thanks for the approval, boys! From our mail bag it would seem that it is coming up in a lot of places. And some of them pretty important ones, too!

From PHILADELPHIA, PA.

We certainly think that your April 22 Editorial ("I AM YOUR MOVIE PATRON") should be reprinted and brought to the attention of every theatre owner in the world. While I know that everybody reads your trade paper, perhaps there are some who are too busy with other things to read your editorials. They shouldn't miss it! If reprints are available we would like a quantity to pass on to our theatre customers.

WILLIAM J. HUTCHINS, Manager
National Theatre Supply

EDITOR'S NOTE: We never plan on reprints, but every now and then the demand is too great to ignore. Should this happen, we'll oblige. But don't worry about theatremen reading our Editorial Page. From the hundreds of helpful letters and phone calls we receive, we believe it is not only the most theatre-wise, but is the best-read page in the entire trade press.

From PERU, Ill.

In your "editor's note," following the letter from the manager in Cleveland, Ohio, as published in your April 8 issue, you told him that the past five seasons of REVIEWS were available to subscriber purchase. I want to buy them. So will you please forward these five seasons and bill us for same.

CHARLES H. BABB, Manager
Kerasotes' Peru Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sorry, but in the interim we ran out of the 1954-55 season. We are shipping the 1955-56, the 1956-57, the 1957-58, and the 1958-59 season to date. Any two of these seasons can be accommodated in a standard 3-ring binder. And a season, by the way, is from the first issue of each September to the last issue of the following August.

From MADEIRA, MINN.

It's that time of the year, so here's our renewal. And also send a pad of booking sheets. We can't get along without them. And keep up the good work. You're doin' fine!

MR. and MRS. B. L. ARKIN, Owners
Madelia Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Renewals are the way to tell a trade paper whether or not it is being read. They're like ballots on Election Day. And in the U.S.A., you'll find that MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR polled 11,097 at the last count.

Lewis Lauds "Oscar" Impact

NEW YORK — Roger H. Lewis, United Artists national director of advertising, publicity and exploitation, described the recent Academy Awards telecast as a major success in terms of its impact on the movie-going public. Lewis made this point as a member of a panel discussing the subject, "The Academy Awards, an Analysis," on radio station WBIA-FM, New York.

The United Artists executive underscored the vast audience reached by the telecast and the invaluable amount of institutional publicity and movie interest created by the "Oscar" presentation ceremonies. "As a rallying point for the entire industry," he declared, "the program was a huge success. More than 80,000,000 potential movie-goers were tuned in to the show, not to mention the millions more who were exposed through world-wide rebroadcasts."

Lewis pointed out that the enormous front-page newspaper and magazine coverage given the Awards presentation was immeasurable in terms of orienting the public toward a greater awareness of outstanding motion pictures being offered.

BROADWAY GROSSES

Holdovers Keep Pace

NEW YORK—With Radio City Music Hall, the Roxy and Loew's State leading the way, business was generally good in the Broadway first-runs last weekend, except for films winding up long runs.

According to usually reliable sources reaching MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR the break-down was as follows:

"THE SOUND AND THE FURY" (20th-Fox). Paramount ($39,435)* — Paramount claimed $19,000 for the fifth and last week.

"COUNT YOUR BLESSINGS" (MGM). Radio City Music Hall ($147,610)—Thursday through Sunday accounted for $105,000, with the opening session sure to top $165,000. Stage show.

"IMITATION OF LIFE" (U-I). Roxy ($55,405)—Friday through Sunday claimed at $54,000, with the second week bound to exceed $79,000. Stage show.

"TEMPEST" (Paramount). Capitol ($33,350)—Fifth and last week heading toward $14,000.

"AL CAPONE" (Allied Artists). Victoria ($22,900)—Fifth week expected to tally $23,000.

"SEPARATE TABLES" (UA). Astor ($25,631)—Nineteenth week estimated at $15,000.

"THE SHAGGY DOG" (Buena Vista). Odeon stated that the sixth week would reach $14,000.

"SLEEPING BEAUTY" (Disney-Buena Vista). Criterion reported that the 10th week would hit $19,000.

"SOME LIKE IT HOT" (UA). Loew's State announced that the fourth week was $55,436, with the fifth Sunday doing $10,933.

"THE DIARY OF ANNE FRANK" (20th-Fox). RKO Palace in its sixth week claimed a brisk pace, although seats were available on the reserved seat basis.

New Penna. Group Fights For Sundays

HARRISBURG, PA. — An independent group to be tentatively known as the Pennsylvania Motion Picture Association has been formed by John C. Broumas, Takoma Park, Md., operator, Transamerica Theatres, several of which are in Pennsylvania, to fight against the state "blue laws" and seek means of voiding bans on Sunday showings.

Broumas estimated that about 100 exhibitors are affected by the Sunday ban and said that all would be contacted and invited to enroll in the association. "We want to stay in business," he said. "We want to stay alive, and this is the only way we can survive."

Broumas, who acted as chairman at the organization meeting, said it took close to four years to organize. John W. Keller, Waynesboro attorney, was retained as legal counsel and John D. Nagy, Jr., Rural Valley, Pa., is serving as treasurer.

Among exhibitors in attendance were Dave and Lee Raybuck, Tremont; John D. Nagy, Sr., Rural Valley; George C. Wilson, Tyrone; Alex Smith, Souderton; James G. Bell, Grove City; Dan Katlin, Lansdale; Chester DeMarch, Grove City; Harold Kagan, Chambersburg; Harold Cohen, Lewistown; and H. S. Rothernel, Lewistown.

Another meeting of the new group will be held within a fortnight for a discussion on strategy to repeal the state law prohibiting exhibition of motion pictures in theatres on Sundays.

High Court Hears "Chatterley"

WASHINGTON—The Supreme Court last week held a limited argument on the appeal of Kingsley International Pictures from a New York State ban on the showing of "Lady Chatterley's Lover," with discussion confined to points made in briefs already before the High Court. The Justices withheld decision.

Lacy W. Kastner, president, Columbia International, is seen in his New York home office following his return from a round-the-world tour of Columbia offices. He said the company's foreign business for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1959, would show an 11 per cent increase over the previous year.

WASHINGTON—Horace Adams yielded to the urgent, unanimous request of the national officers and directors of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors at their board meeting here last fortnight and will retain the presidency until the expiration of his present term, although he will be relieved of many of the burdens of his office.

Adams' alternates on the executive committee of American Congress of Exhibitors are Jack Kirsch and Irving Dollinger, and he will be represented by one or both at the May 12 meeting.

The Allied board went on record as being "gratified" that Spyros Skouras had called a summit round-table conference of ACE to deal with vital problems of the industry, although voicing "disappointment" in the five months' delay in putting ACE into operation.

The board, by unanimous vote, approved the Allied White Paper campaign and reminded that measures essential to the preservation of thousands of independent subsequent run and small town theatres are contained in the decrees in the Paramount case, including, among others, relief against exclusive runs; unreasonable clearances and delayed availabilities; discrimination in terms; fixed admission prices; and encroachment by the divorced circuits, which relief can be made effective by the performance by the Department of Justice of its duty to enforce the decrees.

The board reviewed, territory by territory, the campaign to secure enforcement through Congressional action as described in the White Paper.

United Artists' abrupt change in sales policy was rapped, as was William J. Heineman's "statement of clarification" of the policy. Hope was expressed that the UA vice-president in charge of distribution would issue a more explicit statement.

The situation in Pittsburgh that has arisen in the wake of the Basle Case was considered by the board, with Morris M. Finkel, the director from western Pennsylvania, assured that National Allied sympathizes fully with the Pittsburgh exhibitors in their difficulty and will support and assist them in every feasible and proper way.

Ben Marcus, a member of the managing committee of COMPO, reported on the work being done and to be done by that organization. He was of the opinion that the business building project money contributed by exhibitors should now be returned to them, less necessary expenses, with the recommendation that the funds be pooled locally for promotional endeavor.

National Screen Service was criticized for a reported price increase "at this time."

Marcus recommended that the interim convention to be held prior to the regular 1960 combined convention be held in Miami Beach, Fla., on Dec. 6-7-8; and the board authorized him as general convention chairman to proceed with plans for such a meeting.

The regular spring board meeting scheduled to be held in Boston on May 11-12 was canceled, and the holding of a summer meeting was left to the discretion of the president and the chairman of the board.

New UA Phila. Policy Reduces Blanket Playoffs

PHILADELPHIA—United Artists local exchange last fortnight made a move to reduce the simultaneous number of showings of any given picture in the neighborhoods and key situations by altering its release policy in the territory.

Under the new policy, theatres in the area will be placed in 13 groups, nine for conventional house and four for drive-ins. The houses in each category will be allowed to bid for a new clearance which will make a picture available 14 days after its first-run in midtown Philadelphia. Only a single bid in each group will be accepted by the film company.

The availability under which the houses in each group are now operating will not be altered, and it was said that theatres enjoying availability of 28 days will continue to do so regardless of whether they bid for the new run.

"S. P." Meetings Set

NEW YORK—Joseph M. Sugar, vice-president and general sales manager of Magna Theatre Corporation, and Martin J. Sweeny, Jr., in charge of distribution of "South Pacific" in Todd-AO, attended a meeting last week with 20th-Fox branch managers from Atlanta, Charlotte, Jacksonville, and Memphis. From New Orleans, they were to go to Dallas for another meeting with branch managers from Oklahoma City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Omaha, and Des Moines.

Levine, Top Industry Exploiteer, To Distribute Five Pix Per Year

By MEL KONECOFF

NEW YORK—Joseph Levine, man of many talents and also president of Embassy Pictures, has made his mark in industry records via prime promoting and exploiting, which boosted films into top grossing categories. Last week, he entered the ranks of regular distributors, if present plans for the future are carried out.

At a trade press luncheon at the "21" Club, Levine reported that his company will release approximately five features per year. These will be backed by hard-hitting and suitable campaigns before they play theatres so that exhibitors as well as his company can realize the utmost in returns. He and his associates intend to take as much time as is needed to get across a proper "hard sell" campaign.

His company has acquired seven pictures which are bought and paid for as well as completed, and they are presently being prepared for marketing. They are "Jack The Ripper," "Aphrodite, Goddess of Love," "White Nights," "The Law," "Destruction of the World" (temporary title), "The Circus" (temporary title), and a sequel to the unplayed "Hercules," known as "Hercules and the Gods." The latter, said he, is playing in Rome to even greater crowds than did its predecessor. Each of the aforementioned has been selected for its exploitation pos-

TOA, Heineman Meet To Clarify UA Policy

NEW YORK—George G. Kerasotes, president, and Albert N. Pickus, executive committee chairman, representing the Theatre Owners of America, conferred last fortnight with William J. Heineman, vice-president for distribution of United Artists, to clarify the new sales policy of United Artists.

Kerasotes, Pickus, and Heineman later issued the following joint announcement:

1. United Artists intends to sell pictures at realistic terms, based on the merits of individual pictures, and treat TOA exhibitors fairly and equitably as to terms.

2. Heineman would grant relief to exhibitors who have paid contract terms, within a reasonable time after receipt of payment, if the exhibitor can prove to United Artists' satisfaction that the results did not warrant the contracted terms, but Heineman made it clear United Artists must obtain the producer's approval, which he would then seek.

3. Heineman pledged that any TOA exhibitor who is unreasonably hurt by contract terms would be given a thorough review of his complaint.

Schaefer Joins Carlyle

ISHPEMING, MICH.—While on location here last fortnight directing "Anatomy Of A Murder," Otto Preminger announced that George J. Schaefer, veteran distribution executive, had joined Carlyle Productions as vice-president in charge of sales, effective immediately.

sibilities.

The eight pictures, including "Hercules," will take care of the next 18 months, said Levine. His company will not be a stereotyped distribution organization: Before these films were selected, over 100 features were screened and evaluated. He claimed several millions of dollars will have been invested before the films are ready for market.

Levine doubted that the pictures will go through any major company. Embassy will probably do its own selling and merchandising or operate through state righters. He expects Embassy to go into production with negotiations on with two unnamed companies. Levine is not adverse to producing films in America, but he thought production costs here were too high.

He reported that Jack Warner, after looking at "Hercules," estimated that the film could not have been made here for less than five millions. This film will go into release on July 1, being distributed by Warners but controlled by Levine as to contracts, advertising, and promotion. August will see "Jack The Ripper" released, as well as "The Law." "Destruction of the World" will go later in the fall. Most of the films will get the "Levine treatment," which means large scale radio and TV usage, large-sized newspaper ads, etc., as well as saturation playoffs in given areas.

A REPORT

20th Century-Fox Studio Exec Reports to President Skouras and Assembled Sales Department on Next 31 Feature Releases.

A LONG WITH the announcement last week from the desks of Spyros Skouras and Buddy Adler of 24 productions slated to go before the cameras at 20th Century-Fox in the next six months, came the news that the film company has more than a half-dozen blockbusters either ready for release or in final production stages.

Once again, the production people at 20th-Fox have a varied and exciting lineup for the exhibitor—entertainment packages, stories with shocking themes, adventure dramas, and romantic comedies.

Slated for release in the next few months are these 20th attractions:

Frank Tashlin's "Say One For Me," starring Bing Crosby, Debbie Reynolds, and Robert Wagner in a romantic comedy with music. The story deals with a New York priest (Crosby) whose parish is Broadway and who takes an interest in the career of a young entertainer (Reynolds), who has fallen for a heel (Wagner). Combining many of the elements that made "Going My Way" such a boxoffice favorite, "Say One For Me" is being backed, according to an announcement by 20th-Fox vice-president Charles Einfeld, with a campaign over and above the one given "The Robe."

"Warlock," a brilliant outdoor adventure in CinemaScope and color by De Luxe, starring Richard Widmark, Henry Fonda, Anthony Quinn, Dorothy Malone, and newcomer Dolores Michaels. Produced and directed by Edward Dmytryk, who gave motion picture theatres "The Young Lions," "Warlock" is a star-studded action-filled drama of a lawless town into which a brave man comes to find there are braver men in the world. An explosive cast and a dynamic story mark "Warlock" as a top grosser.

"A Woman Obsessed" is a film company's dream picture. To have Susan Hayward, fresh from Academy Award recognition, in a new and different kind of role, is exactly what 20th-Fox wanted. And it's exactly what they got. Sydney Boehm produced and Henry Hathaway directed the story of a widow in the Canadian forests, forced to marry a man she doesn't love, only to find her love for him growing amid great danger. Stephen Boyd stars with Miss Hayward.

Again, CinemaScope and color by De Luxe.

Nunnally Johnson has made an enchanting romantic comedy from Romain Gary's best-seller "Colors of the Day." "The Man Who Understood Women" stars Henry Fonda and that "Gigi" girl, Leslie Caron. A big-time love story, set against the exciting backgrounds of Hollywood, Paris, and the Riviera, "The Man Who Understood Women" is a sure-fire gem and a natural for the audience which revels in high-powered entertainment.

"Holiday For Lovers" could be 20th-Fox's blockbuster surprise for the summer. A pure entertainment package is this David Weisbart production, directed by Henry Levin. Starring Clifton Webb, Jane Wyman, and new stars Gary Crosby, Jill St. John, and Carol Lynley, "Holiday" takes an American family on a riotous and romantic tour of South America. Based on Ron Alexander's hit Broadway play, "Holiday" is a natural for summer playdates.

In "Blue Denim" and "A Private's Affair," currently before the cameras in Hollywood, 20th-Fox has a pair of up-to-the-minute hits.

"Blue Denim" is based on the sensational Broadway play, dealing with the most explosive theme ever presented on the motion picture screen. Young people figure in "Blue Denim" under the direction of Philip Dunne and producer Charles Brackett. Brandon De Wilde, Carol Lynley, and Warren Berlinger are the youths importantly cast.

In addition to this teen-age "natural" is "A Private's Affair," an hilarious service comedy starring favorites Sal Mineo, Gary Crosby, and Barry Coe, along with young lovelies Christine Carere and Barbara Eden. Produced by David Weisbart, the CinemaScope film is being directed by Raoul Walsh.

Elsewhere in this issue is a reproduction of the multi-paged wire from Adler that was read by Skouras to sales personnel at the company's recent national sales convention. Decisions on the 24 CinemaScope productions were finalized at meetings at the home office between the two company toppers and other executives.

The production schedule, of record proportions, reaffirms the faith of 20th-Fox in the future of the industry and in exhibition in particular and is another indication that this company, at least, has no intention at the moment of silencing or muting its big production guns.

The schedule, varied enough to please any cinematic taste, blends established stars with bright new faces, a casting technique that has proven successful at the boxoffice for 20th-Fox in the past. With the majority of moviegoers in the younger age bracket, inclusion of talented youngsters in shows starring better known names of proven boxoffice power provides insurance for youthful cus-

Does Addition Of Film Advertising Turn "Maja" From Art To Obscenity?

NEW YORK—The seesaw legal battle between United Artists, and the United States Post Office will reach its climax on or before May 1, when hearing commissioner William A. Duval renders his decision as to whether 2,268 postcard reproductions of Francisco Goya's "The Naked Maja" should be withheld from the mails as "obscene."

The decision, which will have sweeping Constitutional implications whichever way it is rendered, will be based on testimony given at a critical hearing held in the General Post Office on April 20 following the Post Office seizure of the postcards in New York on April 2 on the grounds they were "obscene, lascivious or filthy and therefore nonmailable."

Attorneys for both sides were acutely conscious of the fact that the Post Office seizure raised a series of important legal questions largely centered on the problem of whether the addition of advertising material to a given work of art renders it obscene within the Constitutional definition of the word. In the classic "Roth Case," the Supreme Court held that only materials that "arouse a prurient interest in the average man" could be declared obscene, and therefore not protected by the First Amendment of the Constitution.

Attorney Robert M. Ague, Jr., counsel for the Post Office, after conceding that the original painting was not obscene, contended that "... whether any material is obscene is dependent upon what use is made of it," and added, "... to the average person on the street, this is just another picture of a nude woman ... advertising a motion picture. You don't have to hit him over the head with a baseball bat. He gets the message. The picture is going to be sexy."

In answer, Eugene M. Kline, counsel for United Artists, presented a battery of expert witnesses to prove that 1) the painting, both original and as reproduced, was not obscene, and 2) the addition of advertising matter did not change the impact of the work of art on an "average man." The star witness was Dr. Theodore Reik, longtime associate of Sigmund Freud and one of the world's foremost psychoanalysts. Dr. Reik's testimony, however, was declared inadmissible on the grounds that he would be invading "the province of the hearing commissioner" in determining the degree of obscenity in the postcard reproduction. Post Office counsel Ague also objected to the Reik testimony on the grounds that the Doctor "... was not qualified as an expert on average, normal people."

In his affidavit, which was allowed by the hearing officer to accompany the transcript as an "offer of proof," Dr. Reik stated clearly that the painting was not obscene and further volunteered that the "fact that this noted painting is part of an advertising campaign nowise injects an overtone of prurience in the attitudes the average person would bring to the postcard."

Further expert testimony was offered by Dr. Horst Janson, chairman of the department of fine arts of New York University, who testified as to the significance of both Goya and "The Naked Maja" in the field of art. Dr. Janson introduced a vast number of art books, magazines and other publications to show that reproductions of "The Naked Maja" are widely accessible to the "average man." Also appearing before the hearing was Seymour M. Peyser, United Artists vice-president and general counsel, who explained the choice of

"Porgy" To Bow June 24 At Refurbished Warner

NEW YORK—Cinerama's "South Seas Adventure" will end a 40-week run at the Warner on May 17, when the theatre will be closed to be refurbished for the opening on June 24 of Samuel Goldwyn's "Porgy and Bess," it was learned last fortnight.

The Cinerama installation of three booths will be retained with the center booth enlarged for Todd-AO projectors.

Grainger, Bogeaus Set Production-Distrib Firm

HOLLYWOOD—J. R. Grainger, former president of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., during the time Howard Hughes owned control of the company, has set up, in association with producer Benedict E. Bogeaus, a new motion picture distributing and producing organizations. The companies are Inter-Continent Releasing Organization, Inc., and Inter-Continent Films, Inc. Grainger serves as president of the former, with Bogeaus being president of the latter.

In addition to headquarters at Paramount-Sunset Studios in Hollywood, sales offices will be maintained in several key centers of the United States, including New York, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Atlanta, Philadelphia, and Los Angeles. European headquarters will be in Paris with Jack Lamont in charge of sales. Latin American distribution will be handled out of Mexico City with Laurence Speirman in charge of sales.

The first motion picture to be distributed by Inter-Continent Releasing Organization, and produced by its counterpart company, will be "Jet Over the Atlantic," starring Guy Madison.

Arizona House To Open

SEDONA, ARIZ.—V. A. Tyler is opening the new 250-seat Sedona on or about April 24. Exhibitors Service, Inc., Los Angeles, is doing the buying and booking for the theatre.

the painting as part of the advertising campaign of the motion picture, "The Naked Maja." Peyser, under cross-examination, stated that it was entirely "natural" that the painting would be used for advertising purposes inasmuch as the film is directly concerned with the period of Goya's life when the painting was completed and tells the story of its conception.

In summary, Clifford Forester, representing the American Civil Liberties Union, described the Constitutional challenge that the current case represented and concluded with a stinging indictment of the Post Office and their "capricious" censorship. Forester quoted Judge Thurmond Arnold who said, "... perhaps it would be better if the Post Office Department laid aside questions of what is censorable or not, and just simply go about its business of delivering the mail."

Briefs on the case were scheduled to be submitted on April 27, and a decision will be reached on or before May 1. If the decision upholds the Post Office seizure, United Artists has promised to go into the Federal Courts for relief.

SW And Subsidiaries Report Record Profit

NEW YORK—S. H. Fabian, president, announced that for both the quarter ended Feb. 28, 1959, and the six months ended the same date, Stanley Warner Corporation and its subsidiaries report the largest profit since Stanley Warner was organized in 1953.

The profit for the quarter was 70 per cent larger than the profit for the corresponding quarter one year ago; the profit for the six months ended that date shows an increase of 56 per cent over the same period last year.

For the six months, the net income before federal and foreign income taxes was $4,503,700, after deducting depreciation charges of $2,483,900. The net income before federal and foreign income taxes for the corresponding period last year was $3,073,500, when depreciation charges were $2,658,500. The net profit for the six months after all charges, including federal and foreign income taxes, was $2,253,700.

The profit for the six months is equivalent to $1.11 per share of common stock outstanding, which compares with 69 cents per share earned one year ago.

During the six months, unusual property dispositions have resulted in losses of $930,500. As a result of such losses there will be a saving of $500,000 in the payment of federal income taxes.

For the six months, theatre admission, merchandise sales, and other income amounted to $61,881,500, which is an increase of six per cent over similar income of $58,275,500 for the corresponding six months one year ago.

The net profit for the quarter ended Feb. 28, after all charges including federal and foreign income taxes, was $1,074,000 as compared with a net profit of $632,000 for the same quarter last year. The net profit for the February 1959 quarter is equivalent to 53 cents per share of common stock; one year ago the net profit was equivalent to 30 cents per share.

Tenn. Exhibs Convene

NASHVILLE, TENN. — The Tennessee Theatre Owners Association convened last fortnight in the Hermitage Hotel here. The principal address was made by George Roscoe, director of exhibitor relations, Theatre Owners of America, who outlined TOA's achievements during the past year, and gave an optimistic picture of what the American Congress of Exhibitors is accomplishing.

He urged all-out support for ACE and made a plea for better theatre operation. He told the convention of the efforts of TOA "to try and salvage the business-building campaign which never got going, to make it into a complete package, and offer it at cost to any exhibitor who wants to put on a campaign of his own or join with other exhibitors in a state or a region for a broader campaign."

Roscoe also urged the theatre men to buy stock in the film companies so that exhibition might be able to exert an influence on distribution.

Young Stars On "Phila." Tour

HOLLYWOOD—Scheduled last fortnight to make the May 6-19 Warners-Greyhound Scenicruiser coast to coast tour to Philadelphia for the premiere of "The Young Philadelphians" at the SW Stanley were young players Nick Adams, Peter Brown, Arlene Howell, Will Hutchins, Alan Hale, Jr., Diane Jergens, Roger Moore, Erin O'Brien, Roger Smith, and Connie Stevens.

Gigantic Col. Schedule To 1960 Involves 99 Pix At $130,000,000

HOLLYWOOD—A gigantic production and distribution program involving 99 feature films with a projected negative investment of $130,000,000 has been blueprinted by Columbia Pictures for distribution, production, and active preparation during the 18-month period between this April 21 and Nov. 1, 1960. The rise of Columbia as a world-wide filmmaker and distributor has been accomplished by the "new Columbia team" headed by president A. Schneider in New York.

This was revealed by Samuel J. Briskin, who starts his second year as vice-president in charge of west coast studio operations.

With the change-over, some of the leading filmmakers in the industry have joined the fast-growing Columbia roster of top independents who release their product through the company's world-wide distribution set-up.

Not counted in the general program is Samuel Goldwyn, whose motion picture production of "Porgy and Bess" is being distributed by Columbia in June.

Otto Preminger now has before the cameras "Anatomy of a Murder," currently filming in Ishpeming, Mich.

At the present moment, 34 independent producing companies, in Hollywood, New York, and abroad, are allied with the Columbia roster.

Twenty-four of these units are in Hollywood, including UPA Pictures. Four are based in New York, while six make their headquarters in Europe.

Also producing at the studio in Hollywood directly for Columbia are Boris D. Kaplan and Michael Blankfort.

Based in New York are Preminger, David Susskind, Sudan (Paddy Chayefsky), and Drexel (Dick Clark).

Making their headquarters in Europe are Stanley Donen, Hammer Films, Highroad Productions (Carl Foreman), Raoul Levy, Sam Spiegel, and Warwick Films (A. R. Broccoli and Irving Allen).

Twenty-eight films are in the various phases of post-production activity prior to release; six are in production now; nine will go before the cameras by June 1; and 56 are scheduled to go into production by June 1 of next year.

Films awaiting release or available are "Babette Goes to War," "The Bandit of Zhobe," "Battle of the Coral Sea," "City of Fear," "The Crimson Kimono," "Face of a Fugitive," "Gideon of Scotland Yard," "Gunmen From Laredo," "Hey Boy! Hey Girl," "The H-Man," "Idol on Parade," "It Happened to Jane," "Juke Box Rhythm," "Killers of Kilimanjaro," "Middle of the Night," "Murder Reported," "The Last Angry Man," "The Legend of Tom Dooley," "The Mouse That Roared," "The 30 Foot Bride of Candy Rock," "The Two-Headed Spy," "The Woman Eater," "The Young Land," "They Came to Cordura," "Verboten," "Yesterday's Enemy," and "Zex."

In addition to "Anatomy of a Murder," pictures now in production are "Man on a String," "Once More, With Feeling," "Our Man in Havana," "Rim of the Canyon," and UPA's "1001 Arabian Nights."

The nine films scheduled to start production by June 1 are William Goetz' "A Magic Flame," Sam Spiegel's "Suddenly, Last Summer," Ansark-Sidney's "Who Was That Lady?," William Goetz' "The Mountain Road," William Castle's "The Tingler," Philip A. Waxman's "Krupa Story," Harry Romm's "Have Rocket, Will Travel," and Clover's "Lucky" and "High Trap."

The 56 properties on the drawing boards for production between June 1 of this year and Nov. 1 of 1960 include "The Image Makers" (Quine), "Who Is Sylvia" (Corona-Arwin), "The Devil at Four O'Clock" (Kohlmar), "Pepe" (Sidney), "Gulliver's Travels" (Morningside), "Caves of Night" (Theodora), "Strangers When We Meet" (Quine), "Give Me The Stars" (Morningside), "The Twelfth Step" (Security), "Wackiest Ship in the Navy" (Kohlmar), "Time of the Dragons" (Goetz), "The Beach Boys" (Corona-Vidor), "Guns of Navarone" (Highroad), "Other Side of the Coin" (Carlyle), "Raisin in the Sun" (Susskind-Rose), "That Hill Girl," "Baa, Baa Black Sheep," and "Barbara Greer" (all from Kohlmar), "Home Before Christmas" and "Sure Hand of God" (from Security), "Here Come the Brides" (Sidney-Corona), "Cry for Happy" (Goetz), "Roar Like a Dove" (Quine-Arwin), "Air Force Academy" (Morningside), "Revival" (Susskind), "The Chase" (Spiegel), "League of Gentlemen" and "Holiday" (from Highroad), "A Gift from the Boys" (Donen), "Bunny Lake is Missing" (Carlyle), "Brink's Bank Robbery" (YOF), "The Adventures of Don Quixote" (Clover), and "The Man Vanzetti" (Quine). Boris D. Kaplan is preparing four properties for Columbia directly. They are "Fear No Evil," "Let No Man Write My Epitaph," "The Tiger's Tail," and "Bent's Fort." Michael Blankfort is preparing an untitled vehicle.

In addition, Harry Joe Brown and Randolph Scott will produce one picture; Samuel Fuller will deliver three more; Arthur Hornblow, Jr., will prepare two; William Castle will do two; Dick Clark will have two ready; Raoul Levy will deliver three.

Properties now owned by Columbia which are awaiting assignment to a production company include "Andersonville," "The Night Circus," "Last Frontier," "Return Fare," and "Joseph and His Brethren."

Studio Operation Cost Cut 30 Per Cent—Briskin

Briskin revealed that the cost of overall studio operation at Columbia has been cut by 30 per cent during the first year of his three year contract. He said he believed that these cuts can be cut another 10 per cent.

It is now possible, he said, for the studio to List Firm Merged Into Glen Alden Corp.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. — List Industries Corporation last week was merged into Glen Alden Corporation forming a company with assets of more than $132,000,000.

Announcement that the merger had become effective followed approval of the merger agreement in voting at the Glen Alden annual meeting here. List Industries shareholders approved the merger at their annual meeting on April 10.

Glen Alden is the surviving corporation.

The merger agreement provides for the expansion of the Glen Alden board of directors to 18 members — the former Glen Alden directors plus 10 List Industries directors who are not now Glen Alden directors.

Glen Alden's new, complete slate of officers, elected at a board meeting following the merger, includes Albert A. List, chairman of the board and president; Gilbert S. McClintock, vice-chairman of the board; vice presidents: Harry W. Bradbury, president, Glen Alden; William J. Durocher, president, USF-Aspinook Finishing Division; Benjamin R. Ebersman, president, Mathes Division; Alvin O. Herud, president, Aluminum Industries, Inc.; Milton Hubschman, president, E. Hubschman and Sons Division; Sol A. Schwartz, president, RKO Theatres, Inc.; and Dudley G. Layman was elected financial vice-president and treasurer.

The merged corporation has the benefit of the former Glen Alden's $9,800,000 tax loss carry-forward and other tax benefits.

Later, Glen Alden Corporation was listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Smith Leases Fla. House

TAMPA, FLA.—The Britton, built in 1956 by S. E. Britton, was leased last fortnight by Smith Management Company, Boston, through Berk and Krumgold, New York theatre realty specialists.

Located in the Britton Shopping Plaza, the Britton is the most modern and luxurious theatre in Florida and has a seating capacity of 1,986. It is one of the few theatres in Florida equipped with both Todd-AO and also 70mm equipment. The Shopping Center provides a parking area with a capacity of 2,200 cars.

offer an independent producer a 25 per cent charge for production overhead and said he hopes to bring the figure down below that.

Aside from independents releasing through the company, Briskin said studio production will be at about the rate of 30 a year, estimating that "We will be releasing between 35 and 40 pictures this year."

"There will always be a profitable theatre for the motion picture," the studio head said, adding, "but the marginal theatre will have to go."

"It is practicable to maintain a sufficient flow of high-quality product," he said, "if you have enough good people making them and spend enough money."

The picture market today, he said, faces "a higher ceiling than ever—nobody knows how high—with no bottom at all; when a picture doesn't catch on, it just doesn't fail—it falls clear through the floor."

This kind of market, he said, makes it possible "for us to pay prices for subject material that would have formerly been called prohibitive; and makes it practical to invest a large amount of money in a suitable subject without following any of the old methods."

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecoff

PRODUCTION NOTES: Samuel Bronston, producer of "John Paul Jones," at a luncheon press conference at the Sherry-Netherlands Hotel, reported that his Technirama-Technicolor story of the famous naval hero will world premiere June 16 at the Rivoli here to be followed by other key openings.

Proceeds from the Warners release will go to the Navy League, and the Secretary of the Navy has promised full cooperation wherever it plays. In New York, the film will highlight New York's celebration of the Henry Hudson-Champlain 350th anniversary, cooperating with an MPA request that as many pictures as possible open during that week.

The film, which cost $5,300,000 and which needs to bring in eight and a half millions to break even couldn't have been made here, said Bronston, unless miniatures were used, which would have lessened the effect that the film has on viewers.

His next will be "Son of Man" (temporary title), which is the story of Christ and which will get under way in July in Madrid, Jerusalem, and the Near East. It is budgeted at $4,300,000, with no cast or distribution set as yet. This will be followed by "Lord Nelson" in April, 1960, in England and Spain at a budget of $5,500,000.

INSTALLATION NOTE: Cinema Lodge, B'nai B'rith, got itself a new president last week. Well, not really a new one because Al Schwalberg has held the post before, back in 1939 when the Lodge was founded.

About 350 members and guests were on hand at the luncheon at the Hotel Astor where Harry Brandt inducted Schwalberg. Retiring president Joseph Rosen was honored with a gift of a hi-fi set. Jack Levin made a fine master of ceremonies.

Also sworn in were Jack Hoffberg, executive vice-president; Jack Weissman, treasurer; Abe Dickstein, secretary; Irving Brown, Maurice Lechen, Milt Livingston, Joseph Margolies, David Picker, Sol Rissner, Norman Robbins, Nat Rudich, and Leonard Rubin, as vice-presidents. Trustees inducted included Max Blackman, Sidney Burdick, Julius Collins, Harold Danson, Leo Jaffee, Joseph Mahara, Arthur H. Schwartz, and Karl Tausig.

Aboard the dais were Leo Brecher, Joseph Levine, Irving Ludwig, Sidney Markley, Harry Kalmine, Russell Downing, Henry "Hi" Martin, Leslie R. Schwartz, Solomon M. Strausberg, William J. German, Sol A. Schwartz, Harry Brandt, Schwalberg, Levin, Rosen, Harvey Platt, Si Fabian, Ned Depinet, Sam Rinzler, Spyros S. Skouras, Leo Jaffe, Alex Harrison, John O'Connor, Emanuel Frisch, Oliver A. Unger, Edward Morey, Saul Jeffee, Rabbi Birstein.

At a table designated for past presidents were Mr. and Mrs. S. Arthur Glixon, Irving Greenfield, Arthur Israel, Jr., Martin Levine, Burton Robbins, Robert K. Shapiro, Adolph Schimel, Bob Weitman, as well as Mrs. Joseph B. Rosen and Mrs. Alfred W. Schwalberg.

SPRING NOTES: Five thousand freshly cut narcissi, a gift of the Town of Montreux and the Canton of Vaud in Switzerland, were flown to town and distributed to patrons attending the opening day's evening performance of the Radio City Music Hall. The new stage show, "Swiss Echoes," opened along with "Count Your Blessings."

SHORTIES: American-International execs so impressed with "Hypno-Vista," which plays on the power of suggestion in "Horror of the Black Museum," that more pix may be using same in the future. . . . From George Thomas, Jr., in Australia came a miniature boom-erang plugging Stanley Kramer's "On The Beach." Who pays for the broken window, George? . . . From producer Ted Richmond in Spain comes photos plugging "Solomon and Sheba." That's no bull. . . . From UA comes "art studies" of Marilyn Monroe, naturally plugging "Some Like It Hot." She takes a good photo, that gal. . . . Earl Grant sings the theme from "Imitation of Life," so natch U-I's Phil Gerard sends along the record. Good man.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

A "SHOWMEN OF THE YEAR" award—three runners up—three of the five Silver Achievement Citations issued. That is the proud record of Associated British Cinemas in the 1958 MPE Exploitation "Showmen of the Year" contest. Needless to say, the directors are extremely bucked that their personnel featured so prominently in an international contest judged predominantly by American theatre executives.

Such an achievement called for a celebration, and Bill Cartlidge brought the three principle winners to London so that he could personally make the presentations. Douglas Adams made the 800 mile round trip from Kirkcaldy, Scotland, where he manages the Regal, to receive the $200 check and title of "Showman of the Year" for tying for fifth place. He also received his Silver Citation, along with Nat Matthews of the Ritz, Leyton, London, and Ron Crabb of the Lyric, Wellingborough, who has already qualified for two 1959 Achievement Citations.

In congratulating Doug, Bill said how delighted he was that he had brought this distinction to ABC. He had many nice things to say about the contest which he believed was a real spur to managers. What he liked most was that it was different from the special drives and campaigns for individual pictures within the circuit. Then managers felt obliged to partake, but with MPE they submitted campaigns entirely of their own free will because they wanted to compete. Here they were receiving the rewards for their initiative.

In acknowledging the check and silver citation, Doug paid tribute to head office support and his staff. Delighted as he was to find himself on the cover of MPE, he was particularly happy to see ABC mentioned in the caption. He felt he had really done something for the company.

The corporation took advantage of these outstanding showmen being in Town and recognized their talents in the most practical manner. They joined the studio, distribution, and theatre publicists in the conference to decide the national campaign for "Look Back in Anger," which Princess Margaret will honor at a premiere on May 28. In America, this Richard Burton-Claire Bloom starrer will be a Warners release.

At another function, Len Leech, of Pepsi-Cola International, presented Doug with the Pepsi-Cooler Picnic Chest which Norman Wasser had had specially flown across the Atlantic. It is believed to be the first in this country.

UNITED ARTISTS has been celebrating its 40th Anniversary. Monty Morton has appeared on TV and radio programs and introduced excerpts from such pictures as "Some Like It Hot," "Shake Hands With The Devil," "Alias Jesse James," and "I Want to Live," which though still denied a certificate here has been passed by the Irish censor. . . . In what is believed to be unprecedented among gestures in the industry, Associated British's Jack Goodlatte issued a press statement announcing that the independent (but virtually rival company) Nat Cohen-Stuart Levy production, "Carry On, Nurse," has taken more money than any picture ever on the ABC circuit in London, nearly $280,000. . . . Nicole Milnair invited press and friends around to her new mews house to meet the cast of "As Dark As the Night," and then slipped quietly away to Paris as soon as the party got started. She left Laraine Day, Hermione Baddeley, director Terrence Young, and others for good measure. . . . Britain's three major circuits will revert to the former Sunday or Monday starting day for new programs, beginning at once. A test of opening new films on Friday, to increase word of mouth attention, had no effect on box office results.

COMPO May Consider Nation-Wide War Against Daylight Saving Time

NEW YORK—It was learned last fortnight that in response to a request for action from the Virginia Motion Picture Theatre Association, COMPO's triumvirate may consider taking on a nation-wide war against daylight saving time.

If the triumvirate approves, the matter will be submitted to the May meeting of the COMPO board, executive committee, and membership for the final decision.

If the decision is favorable, COMPO will then proceed to organize the country's exhibitors in support of H.R. 1354, introduced at this session of Congress by Rep. Harley O. Staggers, Democrat, West Virginia, and referred to the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

This bill would amend the 1918 Standard Time Act so as to insure that the standard time established by it shall be the measure of time for all purposes, for hearing either at the present session or the next, which starts in January.

At present, the Federal law establishes the time zones on each 15 degrees of longitude and leaves it to the Interstate Commerce Commission to define the exact boundaries of the zones, but the law now applies only to interstate common carriers and Federal activities. Further, there is no enforcing penalty.

The Staggers measure is designed to broaden the scope of the Federal act under the authority given to Congress by the standard of measures clause in the Federal constitution, so as to make it applicable to all purposes within the respective zones, and enforce it nationally the entire year.

The bill has enlisted the support of many volunteer workers, including theatre owners in numerous areas, and petitions to the House are in circulation.

Unique Distrib Plan Launched By UPA

HOLLYWOOD — In a revolutionary distribution move, Stephen Bosustow, president, UPA Pictures, Inc., and Roy Haines, former president and general manager, Warner Brothers Distribution Corporation, last fortnight outlined an "unlimited play agreement" under which exhibitors contracting for 12 "Mister Magoo" cartoons a year will be permitted to retain possession of each of them for 12 months and play them as long or as often as they wish in stipulated theatres.

Haines this week is leaving on a tour of exchange centers and major cities taking orders for the service, which will start late this year and continue with the delivery of one cartoon each month.

The new "unlimited play agreement" provides for the exhibitor keeping each cartoon for a year, exhibiting it at will in theatres named in the contract before returning it to UPA. Circuits may contract for as many prints as they may require, and may rotate their exhibition throughout their theatres included in terms of their lease. All contracts are to be flat lease deals, individually negotiated with Haines, who will then return to the UPA headquarters in Burbank. No exchanges are to be maintained, and all shipments of prints will be direct from the UPA studio to theatres, returnable one year from receipt.

The plan, it was pointed out, will enable theatres to have a single-reel cartoon or more in the booth at all times to round out running times, and eventually as time goes on permit them to assemble their own cartoon shows from the reels on hand.

UPA recently completed its distribution of shorts through Columbia, but that company will distribute UPA's "Magoo's Arabian Nights" feature as previously announced.

Hospital Tour June 25

NEW YORK—The annual pilgrimage of directors and "stockholders" of the Will Rogers Memorial Fund and invited guests to the Saranac Lake Hospital and laboratories will leave New York City via Greyhound buses on June 25, it was announced last fortnight.

Herman Robbins and his sons will host the party at his Edgewater Motel, Schroon Lake, from which the guests will be taken to the hospital to spend a day at meetings, research clinics, and the annual luncheon with patients and guests.

Meanwhile, all purchasers of tickets to the Will Rogers Memorial Fund benefit of the legit attraction, "Destry Rides Again," May 22, at the Imperial, will have a chance of winning three U.S. Savings Bonds.

FPCC Income Rises

TORONTO, CANADA—The net income of Famous Players Canadian Corporation increased last year to $2,656,468 or $1.53 per share, compared with $2,220,186 or $1.28 per share in 1957, it was revealed last week.

The total income in 1958, according to FPCC president John J. Fitzgibbons, was $5,290,197, against $4,926,114 in the previous 12 months.

Paramount Votes Dividend

NEW YORK — The board of directors of Paramount Pictures Corporation voted a quarterly dividend of 50 cents per share on the common stock, payable June 12 to holders of record May 25.

Ohio Admissions Tax Could Cripple Theatres

COLUMBUS, O. — As many as half of Cleveland theatres may be forced to close if the state approves the proposed three per cent admissions tax included in the omnibus tax bill sponsored by Sen. Stephen Olenick, Democrat, Youngstown, said Ken Prickett, ITO secretary, in a speech prepared for presentation to the Senate taxation committee.

Prickett pointed out that there are now only 75 theatres operating in the Cleveland area, compared with 108 indoor and drive-ins 10 years ago. He said that he was in Cleveland a few days ago and learned that the 1300-seat Capitol there was closing.

"Ohio theatres are much worse off than theatres nationally," said Prickett, "for while grosses nationally are up slightly, Ohio's grosses are down. I believe this is due mainly to the fact that Ohio is the most heavily television-saturated state in the nation."

"The state saw fit several years ago to give theatres relief from the admissions tax. At that time, permission was granted to cities to apply an admissions tax. Many of them did. Since that time, cities and towns being aware of the desperate situation of the motion picture theatre have repealed this tax. The one major city still collecting the tax is Cleveland. If the bill is passed, it will add a burden to the theatre industry which may well mean the closing of as many as 50 per cent of the existing theatres in Cleveland."

Jack Armstrong, Bowling Green, operator of 21 theatres in northwestern Ohio towns, told the committee that the proposed tax "would be a great blow and will cause the closing of many more theatres." He said, "We need tax relief in order to continue in business." In his area, he pointed out that city admissions levies were recently eliminated in the towns of Maumee, Port Clinton, and Napoleon.

Industry Dividends Dip

WASHINGTON—The Department of Commerce reported last fortnight that the motion picture corporations issuing public reports paid $3,561,000 in cash dividends in March, compared with $4,416,000 in March, 1958.

Cumulative dividends for the first quarter of this year totaled $7,074,000 against $6,180,000 in the same period of 1958.

Distrib Protests Detroit "Must Die" Censorship

NEW YORK—While acceding to their demands in order to take care of immediate bookings, Sanford W. Weiner, president, Film Representations, Inc., last fortnight protested the "arbitrary action of Detroit police censorship in ordering deletions in 'He Who Must Die.'"

He pointed to quotes from screening bodies of all faiths, daily newspapers, motion picture critics, national and local magazine critics, and others, and said that "their evaluation of the film treats your request for deletions with the scorn it deserves."

Weiner concluded that "It is this kind of irresponsible judgment that is being shown by your censor department that has made police censorship almost a dirty word in the minds of the thinking public."

Better Theatre Projection, Sound Aim Of Exhib Education Campaign

NEW YORK—The improvement of movie and sound projection took a big step forward recently with the organization, at a meeting called by the Theatre Owners of America at the Hotel Astor, of the Council for the Improvement of Theatre and Motion Picture Projection.

Representatives of four trade associations, the IATSE, two carbon companies, and two sound service organizations, meeting with TOA president George G. Kerasotes, agreed upon the immediate institution of an educational campaign for theatre operators for the improvement of projection, sound, and physical theatre maintenance.

The meeting was keynoted by Kerasotes' statement, "That better projection pays." It was agreed TOA would take the lead in an educational campaign to reestablish in theatre operators and owners, the realization that presentation of the best possible picture and sound in the most comfortable surroundings is the prime means of retaining and building patronage. It was then agreed that a questionnaire would be sent to all theatre owners in the country on which they would indicate what technical inspection and services they desired. The theatre operator would be asked to name the equipment dealer or dealers with whom he does business. TOA would then forward this request to the dealer, and the dealer, after handling that portion of the service requested for which he was equipped, would call in the sound, projection, and other specialists as required. After the services were performed, the dealer would so advise TOA so that an adequate follow-up could be maintained.

The nine companies and trade associations represented agreed to constitute themselves as the Council to initiate and carry out the program and to meet as often as required to implement it. It was further agreed that after immediate objectives were achieved, the scope of the Council's activities would be enlarged to include other phases of theatre operation.

TOA's call for the meeting was motivated by the report of the Motion Picture Research Council, which in a two-year survey found sub-par projection in 70 per cent of the theatres inspected. It was the unanimous conclusion of the Council that the booth is the heart of the theatre screen presentation; that it cannot be neglected; is not a necessary evil; nor a place for short-sighted economies. It was the opinion that this message must be carried to exhibitors on a non-commercial basis so that the technicians in the projection, sound, and other equipment areas, would be able to constructively advise the theatre requesting the service, on the best means of improving their projection, sound, and physical theatre equipment.

Attending the meeting were National Carbon Company, J. W. Cosby; Lorraine Carbon Company, Edward Lachman; Altec Service Company, Martin Wolf; RCA Service Company, Ben F. Biben; TESMA, Larry Davee, Vice-President; IATSE, Walter F. Diehl, Assistant International President; SMPTE, John W. Servies and Col. Charles S. Stodter, executive secretary; MPAA, Jack McCullough; TOA, George G. Kerasotes, president, Albert Pickus, chairman, executive committee, Nick Schermerhorn, member, Theatre Equipment Committee, Joseph Alterman, administrative secretary, and Al Floersheimer, director of public relations; TEDA, J. Eldon Peek.

In one of its first actions, the Council congratulated Spyros P. Skouras, president, 20th-Fox, for making his company's product available in stereophonic sound.

The Council also urged exhibitors who are equipped to present stereo sound to do so, and to aggressively advertise it.

WILL YOU SUBMIT TO AN AUDIT?

AN EASTERN EXCHANGEMAN, with plenty of SLIDING SCALE sales experience, chides us for being so naive as to believe that theatremen will submit to an honest audit of their theatre overheads. He thinks this way:

"Distributors introduced SLIDING SCALE as their effort to eliminate adjustments and cutthroat horse-trading from film sales transactions. Admittedly, no two pictures will do exactly the same boxoffice gross at any given theatre. They never have! Therefore, no two pictures are worth exactly the same percentage terms or flat price. High percentage terms, or high prices, should be the reward of the producer who knows how to attract and to please the public's tastes, and should not be the result of ruthless salesmanship. Bill Rodgers recognized this when MGM was the real top dog, and he and Al Lichtman gambled their jobs and their reputations on the fairness of SLIDING SCALE, and on its ability to produce fair terms for MGM's pictures.

"It is still a fair instrument!"

"But it can only stay fair if distributors know that they are getting honest overhead figures, and that there is no falsification by exhibitors. The only way to know that is a searching audit by a reputable outside auditor.

"When they were unable to get such audits, and when distributors found that they were accordingly giving away their company's product, naturally they got cold on it. If theatremen want SLIDING SCALE now, they are going to need to clamor for it, and they are going to need to convince distributors that they will be honest and sincere about it."

He then told us a story about a big picture that he had offered to a prominent exhibitor for 90-10-10. Heavy pressure was put on him to better the deal. So, feeling sure that the exhibitor had "plenty of water" in his overhead, he proposed as an alternate suggestion that they forget overhead and play 50-50. By every yardstick of simple arithmetic this would be a more advantageous deal for an honest exhibitor. But this prominent exhibitor didn't want it. As our exchange man says: "Whose face should be red?"

On this page it has never been our policy to defend cheating or to protect crooks. We do think it is rapidly approaching the time when the honest theatremen will need to stand up and to be counted. It is silly for straight-shooting honest guys to be economically frozen out of this business, because a few unprincipled ones are content to "edge" their way to success with kited overheads, falsified records, underreporting of grosses, and other policies that ruin the relations between seller and buyer.

We seldom ask for expressions of opinion, but on this very important point we would like to hear from exhibitor subscribers everywhere.

Would you submit to an audit if you could then operate "on scale"?

ABOUT LONG TONGUES . . . AND FAMILY DINNER TABLES

WITH ALL of the individuals and organizations that take pot-shots at movies, and at the movie industry, without provable facts, we must shake our editorial head whenever some industry executive, either without thinking or willfully to grab a headline, puts an industry view on the record that is sure to be picked up and to be reprinted with fervor, to the detriment of our industry. And when the industry executive is in a position of prominence, the resultant "black eye" is just bigger and more permanent.

Just recently, a series of events, that we are certain stemmed from thoughtlessness on the part of several different people, provide a modern example.

Out on the coast, Geoffrey Shurlock, administrative head of the industry's Production Code, probably thought he was talking in the privacy of "the family dinner table" when he directed a message to the Screen Producers Guild that was published in the latter's Journal. But then it became part of "the record" and was picked up by a show business trade paper, that must also have forgotten that it was hurting more than helping. And from the show business paper, it "made" the National Catholic wire service, so that it became a front-page featured story in several hundred Catholic weekly papers across the land.

Here was Mr. Shurlock's quote, that was normally featured in bold-face italics: "More and more of our films are being based on subject matter that is further and further removed from the standards of mass entertainment on which the Code is based. Some of the novels and plays recently purchased have drawn whistles even from sophisticates. As your agents, we report to you that it is becoming steadily more difficult to bring this new material into Code requirements."

Mr. Shurlock said "to you," but this thoughtlessness produced the result that he was reporting to, and furnishing adverse "ammunition" to, a host of often hostile and unfair critics. As a matter of record, when broadcast by the NC wire service, this Shurlock quote was tied together with a small adverse reference contained in the large annual report of the New York State Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material, and with a published story claiming that United Artists intended to use Lopert Films and that Columbia intended to use Kingsley-International in order to by-pass their obligations under Code membership. Such guesswork and half-truths were necessary in order to implement the headline, in the Albany paper at least, "MOVIES SEEN DISCARDING CODE."

We are sure that neither Mr. Shurlock nor the Screen Producers Guild have, or had, any such intention. But long tongues and thoughtlessness can turn the best of intentions and the most legitimate intra-industry reports into bad industry publicity.

This we don't need!

Let's learn to keep our tongues between our teeth!

Subsequent to your issue of Aug. 20, 1958, I find Buena Vista pictures listed in the yellow SERVICESECTION under "Miscellaneous" instead of under their own heading. In view of the great number of pictures this company plans to release, don't you think they merit a special heading of their own, right after American-International?

A. J. DAVIS

Fried Theatre Management Co.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Other than four minor independent or foreign pictures, Buena Vista actually delivered four Disney features in the 1957-58 season ending with August, 1958 ("LIGHT IN THE FOREST," "OLD YELLER," "PERRI," and "WHITE WILDERNESS"). So far in the 1958-59 season, they delivered three ("TONKA," "SLEEPING BEAUTY" to 30 theatres, and "SHAGGY DOG"). What "great number of pictures"? In addition to this, Buena Vista has not recognized that the trade press is important to you, or to the industry, and confines their advertising to a page or so each year. Some of their executives have stated that: "We don't need trade papers!" "Trade papers don't mean anything!" "Theatre men tell one another what is doing business!" etc. At the very same time, Buena Vista contradicts these statements by sending out reams of free publicity stories, dozens of free publicity gimmicks, and by having an employee designated as a "trade press contact." In other words, Buena Vista strives for free publicity stories, takes all free listings, and in every other way benefits from trade press services, but seldom picks up its share of "the check." With this kind of "free loading" from all other distributors, you wouldn't have trade papers, a SERVICESECTION, or a "Miscellaneous" heading. As a service to the reader only, we feel we have done our duty when we list these features at all.

From EASTON, MD.

People are still crazy about motion pictures and all you need is good product. The attached picture was taken of the line that was unable to get in for the first show, so they stayed in line until we started selling tickets for the next one. This went on through every show for the full five days that we played the picture, and the constant line stirred up more interest in the town than ever before. We are proud of our little theatre, and as you can see, we even had dogs in line.

PHYLLIS YEATMAN, Manager
Avalon Theatre

EDITOR'S NOTE: Well, the dog wasn't exactly in line. But it was shaggy. And the people were lined up all right. The picture was a newspaper clipping, and not useable by us; but we are using the letter even though Mr. Disney doesn't feel the trade press has any value or should be supported.

From MANITOWOC, WISC.

As President of the Catholic Women's Club (drawing membership from all the parishes in our little city), I am eager to arrange for the showing of a Catholic film at our leading movie theatre as a benefit to raise money, as well as a civic attraction of genuine cultural value. Our theatre manager is very cooperative, and during the past year and a half, corresponding men's clubs have sponsored "THE SONG OF BERNADETTE" and "THE MIRACLE OF MARCELINO" with notable success.

While abroad, I noticed that a film called "MONSIEUR VINCENT" ran for a solid month in a large central London theatre, receiving excellent reviews and general as well as Catholic patronage. Is it possible to procure this film? If not, please suggest other films suitable for the above purpose. If there is a list available of available 35mm. films, I would appreciate receiving one.

(Miss) AGNESE DUNNE, President
Catholic Women's Club

EDITOR'S NOTE: There are lists of many features and short subjects that have Catholic Church approval. This inquiry is being directed to a specializing company. But, in current distribution, may we suggest "THE MIRACLE OF ST. THERESA" and the Louis de Rochemont film "EMBEZZLED HEAVEN".

From LEXINGTON, KY.

There has been much controversy between civic organizations and theatres lately. It came home to us at Mt. Sterling, Ky. (a town of less than 6000), where we have two indoor theatres and a drive-in, with another drive-in as opposition. Four PTA groups, the Chamber of Commerce and the Junior Chamber, signed a round-robin letter asking that theatre-owners "not bring undesirable movies to their screens, such as pictures dealing with the criminal and immoral aspects of teenage life and seductive films." That we show "fewer horror movies and more cowboy, animal, musical, comedy and educational" ones. And they promised that they "would respond heartily to such films." Naturally, the story was featured on the front page of the local paper.

So I took time out to answer, and it also was featured on the front page. While the outcome remains to be seen, I think it is a mistake to remain silent while such groups pop-off about what the American public should or should not see. Perhaps my thoughts on the matter may help others when they are faced with a similar problem.

ANN BELL WARD OLSON, President
Somerset Amusement Co.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Space doesn't permit the repeating of all of Mrs. Olson's very intelligent letter but here are the highlights. Possibly it should be clipped and saved for future reference: "Unfortunately, the American people, that is the masses, seem to have fallen to a new low in what they think they want in film fare. Those very pictures you feel should not be shown are about the only real boxoffice attractions left for the exhibitor to buy that will assure him of a full house."

"It takes all kinds of people to make a world, and it takes all kinds of pictures to satisfy the people."

"You ask for westerns and family-type pictures. We show all these—mostly to empty houses—for even those who say they want this type of picture don't come to see them. Please remember that on the whole the theatre is not a child's amusement. If we ran nothing but pictures that appealed to them we would be out of business. Children do not support a theatre, nor do the class elements. It is the masses—all with different ideas of what they want to see. So producers try to get their money back by producing the type pictures in general demand."

"The so-called horror, sex and juvenile delinquency pictures are a very small minority. You single out these films, but I just wonder if you have sponsored, recommended, seen, or sent your children to see, such fine pictures as: "THE INN OF THE SIXTH HAPPINESS," "SONG OF BERNADETTE," "THE TEN COMMANDMENTS," (and a list of a dozen or more similar shows).

"It may interest you to know that we buy every good picture on the market. We appreciate your interest, and we want to be helpful. We, too, have a moral concern and feel our responsibility, but please try to understand our problem. So many fine, educational and enjoyable pictures die at the boxoffice because parents do not attend, and do not encourage their children to go."

"We agree that some pictures should be advertised "For adults only." and we wish that parents would keep their children from such movies. No child can understand adult themes or the problems of life."

"We will, with your cooperation and patronage, do all we can to provide the best of entertainment."

Nice job!

NEW YORK—The elevation of M. J. Frankovich to the post of chairman of the board of Columbia Pictures, Ltd., of Great Britain and Ireland and the appointment of Kenneth N. Hargreaves to succeed him as managing director have been announced by A. Schneider, president of Columbia, and Lacy W. Kastner, president of Columbia Pictures International Corp.

Fox Stockholders Study Studio Sale

Management-Backed Deal Involves $60,000,000; Firm Predicts Increased Earnings, Aided By TV Activities

NEW YORK—Twentieth-Fox will receive more than 60 million dollars for its Los Angeles studio properties under a proposal to sell them to Webb and Knapp, Inc. The proposal, in which Fox would reserve all oil and gas rights, will be voted on at a meeting of stockholders on May 19. Under California law, their approval is mandatory.

A maximum sales price of $61,110,000 was revealed in a proxy statement and a letter from president Spyros P. Skouras to shareholders. Fox Realty Corporation of California, wholly owned subsidiary of 20th-Fox, has entered into an agreement to sell the studio property to the 91091 Corporation, sponsored by Webb and Knapp, New York realty firm.

Skouras' report also stated that 20th-Fox looks to increased earnings from TV activities through rental of pre-1948 films and new TV production "for many years to come." Consolidated net earnings in 1958 totaled $7,582,357, or $3.30 a share on 2,293,186 shares outstanding. That compared with net earnings of $6,511,218, or $2.49 a share on 2,617,486 shares in 1957. Income from all sources totaled $124,998,120 in 1958, compared with $127,662,227 in 1957. Earnings before income taxes in the U. S. and abroad were up to $14,288,042 in 1958, from $13,641,218 the year before.

"In each of the past two years, more than $6,000,000 of our gross income has come from the rental to television of our pre-1948 library of feature pictures. This source of earnings can be expected to continue in 1959 and for many years to come. Meanwhile we hope to build up new and important earnings from the production of films exclusively for television," the report to the stockholders asserted.

Terms for the sale of the 260-acre main studio property, located between Pico and Santa Monica Boulevards, Los Angeles, call for $39,660,000 to be paid within 10 years from closing. Not included are 75 acres, on which the main studio buildings are located. These 75 acres must be purchased by the buyer five years from the date of the first purchase. Price will be $16,450,000 for the land and may include up to $5,000,000 additional for improvements and relocation expenses. While 20th-Fox can rent those 75 acres for 25 years, at an annual rental of eight percent of the purchase price, the proxy statement said, "At some convenient time, (it) might transfer its studio activities to less expensive locations."

Fox Realty owns a 2,300-acre ranch, north of Los Angeles and a studio on Western av., in the city.

"This property is becoming too valuable to continue much longer to be used for motion picture purposes," the statement explaining the sale said.

The 91091 Corporation has made a down payment of $2,500,000 for the main property. Fox Realty may retain that payment in liquidating damages should the deal be terminated, before closing, by the buyer.

According to the explanatory statement, deal for the 75 additional acres calls for half the $16,450,000 price five years from date of the first purchase and half by purchase money deed of trust payable over 10-20 years,

TOA Seeks Exemption From Minimum Wage Act

WASHINGTON—A. Julian Brylawski, TOA legislative chairman, stated last week that TOA would ask wage-hour law amendments to insure that ushers and other theatre employees are not made subject to provisions of S1046 and companion bills on which the Senate Labor Committee will hold hearings beginning May 5.

The Federally-fixed minimum hourly wage rate in the bills would be increased from $1 to $1.25, with the work week cut to 35 hours and overtime pay effective after that number of hours.

The favored drafts appear not to include theatre employees in smaller theatres, but would blanket all if they are employed by chains which gross $500,000 or more annually. Brylawski is anxious to obtain specific and complete exemption for all exhibition.

Samuels Joins UMPO As Sales Manager

NEW YORK—Leo F. Samuels has been appointed general sales manager of United Motion Picture Organization, Inc., distribution company specializing in foreign film imports, it was announced last week by Richard Davis, president.

SAMUELS

The appointment of the former president of Buena Vista to the sales executive post, effective immediately, was made prior to Davis' departure for Europe to survey the current film production scene and meet with producers regarding the acquisition of several pictures.

In his absence, Samuels will supervise the functioning of the company and set sales plans on "Orders to Kill," the first of a series of seven top European films to be released domestically by the firm.

Samuels, a veteran of 34 years in the motion picture industry, was with the Disney organization for 20 years in a number of major executive and sales posts, including foreign sales manager and world-wide sales supervisor. He played a key role in the organization of Buena Vista and was elected its president and general sales manager in 1954.

Golden Heads Charity Drive

NEW YORK — Herbert L. Golden, United Artists vice-president in charge of operations, and president, United Artists Television, Inc., has been named chairman of the Greater New York Fund's amusement division, publicly-owned corporations.

depending of duration of lease-back of studio acreage, bearing interest at five percent a year. The 91091 Corporation will be reimbursed its $2,500,000 down payment, with interest, if 20th-Fox stockholders fail to approve the sale, or if re-zoning is not accomplished within six months.

MPAA Exec Stresses Danger Of Censorship

BALTIMORE—A warning of the "hidden dangers" in recent drives for stronger censorship laws, headed by "uninformed and uninquiring" people was heard by the state conference of the Maryland Library Association from Margaret G. Twyman, director of community relations for the Motion Picture Association of America last week.

Mrs. Twyman, speaking on "The Freedom of Inquiry," went on to say that censorship proponents "are aided and abetted by vote-seekers and segments of the population who are denied the privilege of thinking and acting independently, without coercion. Sadly enough, the motivations of many of the citizen protagonists of censorship are sincere."

Each enacted censorship law, Mrs. Twyman said, has the inherent "hidden danger" of leading to a "totalitarian form of government."

Speaking of the effect of movies on youngsters, Mrs. Twyman pointed out that "one of the oft-heard claims against movies is that movies cause juvenile delinquency. How disarmingly simple. The real facts, if one inquires, would hardly support such claims. Unfortunately, history tells us that young people have failed to conform, some even being misguided into explosive and violent behaviour patterns long before the invention of the printing press, the motion picture screen, or the use of the air wave."

COMPO Meets May 13

NEW YORK—Progress in the establishment of an industry-wide coast-to-coast public relations network will be disclosed at a meeting of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, here on May 13.

The meeting date was set in an announcement by Charles E. McCarthy, information director.

Public relations activities represent one of the American Congress of Exhibitors' assignments to COMPO. The meeting will also hear reports on the Academy Awards promotion and film censorship. COMPO is also expected to determine whether it will enter the legislative contest against Daylight Saving Time, as urged by the Virginia Motion Picture Theatre Association. Representative exhibitors around the nation are being polled as to their views on the issue by McCarthy. The results of the poll will be revealed at the meeting.

NT Net Tops Last Year

LOS ANGELES — Consolidated net income of National Theatres, Inc., and its subsidiaries for the 26 weeks ended March 31, was $903,838 or 34 cents per share as compared with $743,897 or 28 cents per share for the first 26 weeks of the preceding fiscal year, it was announced last week. These amounts include gains (net of federal taxes) from the disposition of interests in theatres and properties of $259,000 or nine cents per share for the current period, which compares with $170,000 or six cents per share for the corresponding period of last year.

The company disposed of 26 theatres during the first half of its fiscal year.

a programmer with a flock of "new faces," which is being given an exploitation campaign incorporating numerous exciting tie-ins aimed at the teenage group. Definite results have been found in many grass-roots levels.

Outstanding are the beverage promotion tying in with Coca-Cola, and the tie-in with

A MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR SPOTLIGHT SURVEY

Rose Marie Reid, top manufacturer of bathing suits for women which gets the picture promotional coverage in situations with stores featuring this popular teen-age merchandise.

Also, the tie-in with Dick Clark, popular star of TV, who has a tremendous following among teenagers around the country, and who gave "Gidget" his personal endorsement.

Perhaps the best-publicized stunt was the awarding of the world premiere to a Dallas housewife in a tie-in with "The Price Is Right," popular TV show. Stars and newsmen appeared in her living room, accompanied by all the usual premiere ballyhoo.

The result of this extensive and varied selling job could only be an increase in patronage at theatres all over the land. It has long been an axiom in this business that a campaign won't lift a bad picture into the blockbuster class and that a good picture without a campaign is in just as much trouble.

"Gidget" had all the elements. It was geared to appeal to the audience that still considers the movies a prime entertainment medium, the teen-ager and the young adult. It brought to the screen a host of fresh new stars with whom the youngsters could readily identify. Most important, it is packed with entertainment, a wholesome sort as likely to appeal to many adults as to the younger set.

The picture was there, and the campaign sailed into high along with it. The kids knew it was coming, and were waiting for it. Of such things are successful campaigns made. Yes, Columbia's merchandising efforts are paying off at the only window that counts—the ticket window.

THE PUSH... that sells PICTURES

Columbia's Merchandisers "Pull All the Stops" to Pre-Sell "GIDGET" to Its Teen-Age Potential

INDUSTRY observers can list many an entertaining picture that didn't hit its full boxoffice potential because the public just didn't know about it, or about its entertainment excellence. By the same token, it is easy to recall another list of boxoffice successes that got that way only because of the strong merchandising that was put behind them. In these latter, many a producer, star, or director has taken a bow, when its real reason for success didn't even appear on the screen.

Proper merchandising, however, depends on a full merchandising department, plus its field staff, to implement the local applications. Industry depressions, or need for economies, should never seep into or weaken merchandising staffs. They rank in importance with the best studio brains.

A case in point is Columbia's "Gidget,"

Various aspects of the promotion are seen here, including tall girl picket lines, fan club activity, teen-age favorites starring in the film appearing with TV idol Dick Clark, TV appearances and disc jockey tieups, and store and fashion activity based on tieup with Rose Marie Reid bathing attire.

TOA Questionnaire To All Exhibs Launches Better Projection Effort

NEW YORK—Members of the Council for the Improvement of Theatres and Motion Picture Projection were asked last week to review the questionnaire which will be sent to all American theatre owners in the initial move by the Council to provide theatre men with technical inspection and training service for the improvement of their presentation of motion pictures.

The New York office of TOA disclosed that it had sent drafts of the questionnaire to Council members for their review and suggestions. The questionnaire is designed to enable theatre men to check off the type of technical service they would like so that TOA, with the cooperation of equipment and service dealers throughout the country, can arrange to have technicians visit the theatres.

George G. Kerasotes, president of TOA, said that as soon as the questionnaire is approved, and as soon as the Theatre Equipment Dealers Association provides TOA with a list of dealers in the field who will cooperate in the program, the questionnaire will be mailed out to theatre men and the program officially launched. Kerasotes said he hoped that this could be accomplished within 30 days.

The Council was organized on April 16 at a meeting called by TOA and attended by representatives of TOA, TESMA, TEDA, SMPTE, the IATSE, National Carbon Company, Lorraine Carbon Company, Altec Service Company, and R.C.A. Service Company. All agreed at that time to constitute themselves as the Council and to conduct the educational and training program as the Council's first objective. Need for the educational work was motivated by a report of the Motion Picture Research Council, which in a two-year study, found sub-par projection in 70 per cent of some 700 theatres inspected.

Mich. Co-Op Names Smith

DETROIT — A stockholders' meeting officially affirmed what has been a fact for some time in the appointment of Alden W. Smith as executive vice-president in charge of buying and booking for the Cooperative Theatres of Michigan.

This organization, founded in 1928, originated film booking and buying on a cooperative basis, and has grown to be the largest such firm in the country, now handling product for 125 theatres.

The stockholders also acceded to the request of Sam H. Barrett, who has been with the company since its inception, that he be relieved of some of his responsibilities which have included being assistant film buyer and booker and office manager. The last post will go to Fred Sturgess, who has been with Co.-Op for 18 years.

Schwalberg Heads UCP Drive

NEW YORK — Alfred W. Schwalberg, chairman of board, Citation Films, Inc., has been appointed chairman, motion picture division, United Cerebral Palsy Drive.

This marks the 10th consecutive year that Schwalberg has been an officer of the United Cerebral Palsy campaign.

The Motion Picture Division will launch its drive on May 8, with committee meetings scheduled throughout the country. Solicitation of funds will commence the week of May 11.

Court Upholds Placing Police In Conn. Theatres

HARTFORD, CONN.—Superior Court Judge Louis Shapiro has ruled that policemen on duty inside New Britain, Conn., motion picture theatres may be annoying to the owners, but the practice of stationing uniformed lawmen in theatres is not unconstitutional.

His ruling came in a $250,000 damage suit brought against the city of New Britain by Perakos Theatre Associates and Stanley Warner management Corporation. The two circuits protested that requiring paid policemen to be on duty was contrary to both federal and state laws.

Anti-DST Bill Set Back By Crowded Calendar

WASHINGTON—A crowded calendar will probably force the current session of Congress to forego action on H. R. 1354, Rep. Harley O. Staggers' bill to end local daylight saving time. The West Virginia Representative said that the Congressional calendar is dropping pages too rapidly to suggest committee action this year on the measure to ban DST.

Speaking of his file of communications backing his bill, Rep. Staggers said that his correspondents are almost unanimously against permitting daylight time zones to continue. There is hardly a state that is not represented among the opposers, he said.

The bill would reassert Federal control over the pattern to be observed in the United States with "standard" time fixed for each zone. The Interstate Commerce Commission will support the Staggers bill. In a message to the committee in charge, the Commission declared, "Local self-determination of time standards is wholly incompatible with a uniform system of time zones."

"Hideout" To Astor

NEW YORK — "Hideout in the Sun," Doris Wishman feature, has been turned over to Astor Pictures, Concluding the recent agreement to world premiere Samuel Goldwyn's "Porgy and Bess" at the Warner, New York City, were Abe Montague, executive vice-president, Columbia, shaking hands with Harry Kalmine, general manager, Stanley Warner Theatres, as George Josephs, sales manager for Goldwyn, looked on.

NSS Price Increase Limited In Scope

NEW YORK—Herman Robbins, president, National Screen Service, last week denied statements made by the recent special board meeting of National Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors that the company had made a general price increase of 15 per cent.

Robbins stated that the NSS price increase pertains only to "standard accessories" which are served on a "lease basis."

The NSS head added that "We do not wish to infer, however, that we are not attempting to increase our service rates, for we are necessarily motivated to do so by the ever-increasing costs of everything appertaining to our service, and in addition to the diminishing number of theatres which have severely reduced our revenue concurrent with our increased costs of doing business."

"In every instance that we have negotiated," Robbins concluded, "the increases we have sought, when properly analyzed, result in an increased cost to the exhibitor of pennies daily, per theatre. So nominal an increase for our services, which are a very small part of exhibition's operating costs, surely is not the difference between an exhibitor's continuing to operate his theatre or having to close it. Nor can so nominal an increase represent the difference between our service continuing to have nor no longer having a value."

Robbins' statement was carried in an Allied bulletin to members as an effort to clarify the issue.

Syosset, L. I., Gets Cinerama

NEW YORK — Cinerama, which has hitherto been limited to the major cities of the globe, will move to the Syosset Theatre, Syosset, L. I., on June 17. This engagement of the entire series of the world-famous adventure spectacles follows the end of the run at the Warner, Broadway, on May 17 of the current presentation, "Cinerama South Seas Adventure."

The Syosset will undergo an extensive interior re-construction in order to install the integrated series of inventions which create the unique Cinerama effect. The Syosset Theatre will follow the policy of the other 28 theatres around the world and start its triple camera — triple projection career with "This Is Cinerama."

According to B. G. Kranze, vice-president of the Stanley Warner Cinerama Corporation, who negotiated the Syosset deal with Sala Hassenin of Skouras Theatres, Cinerama will be shown in many new locales throughout the United States. He said, "Technical developments have facilitated the presentation of Cinerama, and exhibitors now feel it feasible to present this process since they are assured of a steady flow of features."

Cannes Entries Set

NEW YORK — The Cannes Film Festival Committee last week advised G. Griffith Johnson, MPEAA vice-president for Europe, of the titles of the American films which will be shown during the Cannes Film Festival, May 1—15.

The official U. S. entry is Columbia Pictures' "Middle of the Night," the film version of Paddy Chayefsky's stage success.

Also invited to participate is the 20th-Fox feature, "Compulsion." 20th. Fox's "The Diary of Anne Frank" is to be shown out of competition.

Big Paramount Boxoffice Festival Launches Trio Of Summer Releases

NEW YORK—"Paramount's Summer Boxoffice Festival," celebrating the unveiling of three major mid-summer releases, will be held in 30 cities throughout May, George Weltner, Paramount vice-president in charge of world sales, announced last week.

The Paramount "Festival" will take the form of a special series of triple film showings in the 30 cities for exhibitors, film buyers, representatives of press, radio and television, and important opinion-makers.

Weltner personally was to launch "Paramount's Summer Boxoffice Festival" in five cities, beginning with Boston on May 3.

Weltner described the three pictures on the "Festival" program as "potentially the biggest grossing warm weather trio ever offered by Paramount." They are:

Hal Wallis' "Don't Give Up The Ship," starring Jerry Lewis and Dina Merrill; Wallis' "Last Train From Gun Hill," in Technicolor, starring Kirk Douglas, Anthony Quinn, Carolyn Jones, and Earl Holliman; and Shavelson-Rose's "The Five Pennies," in Technicolor, starring Danny Kaye, Barbara Bel Geddes, Louis Armstrong, and Harry Guardino.

Philadelphia on May 6 was to be the second city where Weltner will conduct "Paramount's Summer Boxoffice Festival." The sales executive then will take the "Festival" to Atlanta, May 10; Dallas, May 12; and Chicago, May 17.

Jerry Pickman, vice-president in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation, will accompany Weltner to the five cities. They will be joined in Boston, Philadelphia, and Atlanta by Hugh Owen, and in Dallas and Chicago by Sidney Deneau. Owen and Deneau are vice-presidents of Paramount Film Distributing Corporation.

In each city the home office executive trio will participate with Danny Kaye himself in the unveiling of "The Five Pennies." Weltner's "Festival" itinerary has been set up to coincide with the visits Kaye will make to those places in the course of his own previously announced 15-city tour on behalf of the picture and the soundtrack album of the same title that Dot Records will issue.

Paramount division and branch managers will conduct "Paramount's Summer Boxoffice Festival" in other cities, namely Washington, St. Louis, Toronto, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and San Francisco, coincident with Kaye visits.

Also scheduled for "Paramount's Summer Boxoffice Festival" are Buffalo, Charlotte, Jacksonville, Memphis, New Orleans, Indianapolis, Des Moines, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, Los Angeles, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Calgary, Montreal, St. John, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

Brylawskis' Anniversary

WASHINGTON — Mr. and Mrs. A. Julian Brylawski, left last week to celebrate their golden wedding anniversary with a trip to Bermuda with members of their family.

Brylawski has been president of the Metropolitan Theatre Owners Association for over 30 years and is the perennial and active chairman of the TOA national legislative committee.

Twin Theatre Shows Foreign, Domestic Films

COLUMBUS, O. — Bexley art theatre, operated by Louis Sher's Art Theatre Guild, has inaugurated a new policy of showing two different features simultaneously on its twin screens. The theatre, with 280 seats per auditorium, has been renamed the Continental American.

Sher plans to show one foreign film and one domestic feature on each bill. For the pre-opening test week, the Continental show "Folies Bergere," and the American had a revival of "A Streetcar Named Desire."

Patrons may select which attraction they want to see. Should they desire to see both, they may do so. Schedules are arranged so that the complete show times in both auditoriums will be the same.

The Bexley was opened 21 years ago by Ted Lindenberg, who devised the sound system and the unique projection system. The feature was shown on the twin screens via a lens-and-mirror system angling from one projector.

B-B Refunds Prepared

NEW YORK—It was reported last fortnight that the MPAA would not pay half of the $28,000 bill incurred in behalf of the business building campaign and representing expenditures for the disc jockey platters and campaign brochures.

This amount will thus be deducted from money paid in by theatre operators before the refund checks to which they are now entitled upon the abandonment of the campaign are dispatched.

The total actually paid in by exhibitors was approximately $170,000 although sufficient pledges had been received to bring the total to about $325,000.

End To Chi Censors Urged

CHICAGO — An end to pre-censorship of adult films for exhibition in Chicago has been proposed in an ordinance submitted to the City Council by Alderman Leon Despre, Fifth Ward. The ordinance has been referred to a Council committee for study.

AB-PT Net Up 25% Over 1958 Quarter

NEW YORK — Estimated net operating profit of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc., for the first quarter of 1959 was 25 per cent higher than the like period of 1958, Leonard H. Goldenson, president, reported last week.

AB-PT net operating profit for the first quarter of 1959 was $2,313,000 or 54 cents a share, as compared with $1,854,000 or 43 cents a share in the 1958 quarter.

In his report to stockholders, Goldenson said the television and radio operations of the ABC Broadcasting Division showed improvement over the comparable quarter of the preceding year. The ABC Television Network's programming for the 1958-59 season continued to reflect increased billings and audience gains.

Theatre business was not equal to the same quarter of last year, primarily due to the substantial New Year's week business which was included in the 53 week 1958 fiscal year. Goldenson said that with the playing of a number of top motion picture attractions, business toward the end of the quarter showed improvement over the same period of the preceding year.

Am-Par Records, a subsidiary of AB-PT, recently purchased a majority interest in a record pressing plant in keeping with its expanding business, Goldenson also reported.

NT Hearing Set

WILMINGTON, DEL.—May 7 was set last fortnight by the Court of Chancery for hearing of objections by stockholders of National Theatres to a proposed settlement of the stockholder action brought by Sara H. Helfand, A. S. Gembee, et al.

Under the settlement, approved by the NT board of directors, Elmer C. Rhoden, former NT head, will terminate a lease held by a subsidiary of Fox Midwest Theatres on the Esquire Theatre Building, Kansas City, while an employment contract between Rhoden and NT will be cancelled, along with NT stock options held by him. Rhoden will further execute a new lease to Fox Missouri Theatre Company covering a parking lot near the Uptown, Kansas City.

20th-Fox Adds Branch Ad Managers In Line With Local Autonomy Setup

NEW YORK — Announcements of 20th Century-Fox' new regional advertising-publicity manager system throughout the United States, consistent with the "local autonomy" policy recently announced by president Spyros P. Skouras, were made last week.

The first two newly-appointed managers are Ed Hale, who will work out of the Jacksonville branch, and Pete Bayes, who will function at the Denver-Salt Lake City office. The plan will eventually provide an advertising aide-de-camp for each 20th-Fox branch manager.

Twentieth's original staff will be concentrated in single branches, rather than cover wide areas.

Following are the assignments of 20th's regional advertising and publicity managers:

Hal Marshall, Philadelphia; Sol Gordon, Chicago; Phil Engel, Boston-New Haven; Jimmy Gillespie, Dallas; Adrian Awan, Cleveland-Detroit; Chick Evens, Kansas City-St. Louis; Eddie Yarbrough, Los Angeles; Dan Yarbrough, San Francisco; Sam Glasier, Toronto.

These men, as well as all additional regional managers, will continue to operate under the supervision of exploitation director Rodney Bush and exploitation manager Eddie Solomon. Bush and Solomon are currently completing plans for expanded national coverage and service.

Cinerama Reports Loss

NEW YORK — A net loss of $94,194 in the year ended Dec. 31, 1958, has been reported by Cinerama, Inc., in the annual statement issued last week. That compared with a net income of $58,250 in the year ended Dec. 31, 1957.

Production of "The Eighth Day" was abandoned as of Dec. 31, 1958, and the accumulated cost was charged to 1958 income. During 1955-1958, some $439,688 was spent on film production.

Operating income during 1958 totaled $1,773,460, compared to $1,298,146 in 1957.

Damage Suit Settled

MINEOLA, N. Y. — Skouras Theatres, owners, Cove, Glen Cove, N. Y., agreed last fortnight to pay $25,000 to a 16-year-old boy who had lost the sight of one eye when he was hit by a bobby pin apparently fired from a slingshot in the theatre six years ago.

Supreme Court Justice Cortland A. Johnson approved the settlement. No one ever determined who had fired the shot. The incident was said to have been only one of many at that time during matinee shows in the theatre.

Dallas Variety Club Honors Claude Ezell

DALLAS — Approximately 300 showmen paid tribute to one of their leaders, Claude Ezell, last fortnight in the Variety Club's luxurious new quarters.

Ezell was a founder of the Dallas Variety Tent 17 and has been active during all the eventful years that the club has been in existence, including a long tenure of office as chief barker. He was also among the founders of Variety Clubs International.

Showmen call him the father of the drive-in theatre and recall that he opened the first such theatre in Dallas. He organized the Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Association, as well as the International Drive-In Theatre Owners Association, serving as president of both during his long career as head of Ezell and Associates, operators of the largest drive-in circuit in the world.

R. J. O'Donnell, vice-president and general manager of Interstate Circuit, delivered the principal address paying tribute to Ezell, whom he named the motion picture industry's great friend and benefactor.

Among those eulogizing Ezell were Phil Isley, president of Isley Theatres and present chief barker of the Dallas Variety Club; John Rowley, president of Rowley United Theatres and past international chief barker; Ed Rowley, executive vice-president of United Artists Theatres, New York; and H. J. Griffith, president of Frontier Theatres.

Paul Short, divisional manager of National Screen Service, was toastmaster.

Paley Heads VC Tent 45

NEW ORLEANS — Irving Paley, advertising and publicity director, Paramount Gulf Theatres, has been elected chief barker of the city's Variety Tent 45. Paley succeeds George Nungesser, who passed away earlier this year.

Other officers remain the same for the balance of the year and are William A. Holiday, first assistant chief barker; Samuel A. Wright, second assistant chief barker; Alvin Hodges, property master; Carl J. Mabry, dough guy.

Paley is also president of the United Cerebral Palsy Association of Greater New Orleans, Inc., and is on the board of directors of the Louisiana Council for Handicapped Children, the state Cerebral Palsy Association, the New Orleans Friends of Music, and the Anti-Defamation League.

Newsreel Group Asks "Oscar" Consideration

NEW YORK—The MPAA newsreel committee held its annual meeting at the Harvard Club recently. C. B. Stratton, executive vice-president of Hearst Metrotone News (News of the Day) was elected chairman for the coming year.

After an extended term of four years as chairman, Edmund Reek, vice-president and producer of Fox Movietone News, stepped down. The committee expressed its appreciation for his valuable services.

Highlighting the items of discussion at the meeting was a unanimous decision that the committee put before the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences the question as to why the newsreel has not been recognized by the Academy for its outstanding contribution to the motion picture industry in the 31 years of the Academy's existence.

Also discussed was the newsreels' position as the industry's major public relations arm. The newsreels are called upon nearly every week to provide services requested in support of not only the industry itself, but the government and many national organizations, including the American Red Cross, American Cancer Society, the President's Committee to Employ the Handicapped, U. S. Savings Bonds and other philanthropic organizations. The committee went on record to the effect that this service, being an all-industry matter, properly should be shared by the industry and not charged solely against the newsreels.

It was brought out that not only do the newsreels serve the industry domestically but frequently in many foreign countries as well. For many years the newsreels have given special coverage to visiting foreign dignitaries who represent important film markets throughout the world. The release of this footage abroad has done much to further the industry's international public relations.

B and K Reelects Board

CHICAGO — All directors were reelected at a Balaban and Katz stockholders meeting, recently. Profits of $362,529 in 1958 were reported, together with dividends of $1.38 on common stock. Reelected were David B. Wallerstein, president, Elmer Upton, secretary-treasurer, and the following from A B-P T, Inc., of New York: Leonard H. Goldenson, Simon P. Siegel, Sidney M. Markley, and Edward Hyman.

While in Philadelphia on an exploitation and publicity tour on behalf of Columbia's "Gidget," Cliff Robertson, star of the film, visited the local exchange and is seen with, left to right, Benny Rosenthal, Milt Young, Lester Wurtel, Addie Gottshalk, and Joe Flood.

The NEW YORK Scene

By Mel Konecuff

PRODUCTION NOTES: Sy Bartlett, producer, wanted to talk about his latest film, "Pork Chop Hill," so we listened. Bartlett, who is vice-president of Melville Productions, a company formed by Gregory Peck, said he and Peck decided to make the film based on a property found by the actor because it said something. They tried to make it a realistic war picture, and so it has emerged, if the various recommendations and amounts of praise heaped on it by Defense Department and Army officials are any standard.

They believed it has a relationship to the events of the world of today, telling the rest of the world that America and its people stand by their principles. According to Bartlett, audiences have taken to the film, with 80 per cent of sneak preview cards falling into the "excellent" or "good" category. So strongly does he feel about the film that he "won't be sorry whether the film makes a nickel at the boxoffice or not."

There are some 63 speaking parts in the film, and nearly all of them are filled by young actors who have never made a film, giving more than lip service to the idea of using new faces in films. Besides, their use adds to the realism and effectiveness of the entry.

The UA release has been set for key regional openings at the end of May, tying in with Memorial Day and with local veteran celebrations, armed forces observances, etc. Both Bartlett and Peck are scheduled to make tours plugging the film. On the local level, some 48 survivors of the Korean action will be honored at ceremonies to be hosted in most cases by the governors of states. Captain Joe Clemons, the hero portrayed by Peck, will also participate in promotional activities.

HORROR DEPARTMENT: Herman Cohen, former exhibitor and distributor, and presently a producer specializing in horror, was in town last week to help promote his latest, "Horrors of the Black Museum," an American-International release, which is in CinemaScope, Eastman Color, and Hypno-Vista. The latter is a gimmick that precedes the picture proper. Psychologist Emil Franchel conditions the audience to what they are about to see via suggestive conversation that almost borders on the hypnotic.

Cohen has made up 350 prints on the feature and is using them to advantage on a saturation basis, such as 101 day and date playoffs in New York City, 82 in Boston, 75 in Dallas, etc. According to local A-I franchise holder George Waldman, 600 accounts will be realized in the New York area within the next few weeks. He credited the quick playoff to exhibitor demand, stating that it was the biggest production released by A-I to date.

It may very well mark the beginning of a new type of program by that company which will reduce its annual output to 18 or 20 features, as compared to the 30 that were made last year. They will be bigger, and presumably better.

It took six weeks to make "Horrors" in London in a co-production deal with Anglo-Amalgamated Productions. It could have been made in Hollywood in half the time, but the costs would have been about the same. The way it turned out, there is authenticity and the added punch of having been made on the scene, so to speak.

Cohen recalled that he made "I Was A Teenage Werewolf" for under $150,000 and it grossed two millions. Ditto "I Was A Teenage Frankenstein." He couldn't have duplicated this today because the horror films have improved production-wise to the extent where color and other additions are used. He believed that there was still a healthy market for the horror film, especially if they are geared at the younger moviegoer who makes up 72 per cent of the theatre attendees.

As for his next, exhibitor reaction and advice will help him decide what property to make. He and Franchel are making appearances with the film throughout the country as added promotion. Forty thousand dollars is being spent on the local campaign, while $250,000 has been allocated on a national basis, the largest ever by the company. Cohen likes the A-I set-up because it's a "young and progressive company," and the franchise holders have a fine enthusiasm for their jobs as well as a fresh approach to their selling. He is committed to release one more film through the company, and since he doesn't like to make long term deals, he doesn't know where the Cohen epics will go next.

LONDON Observations

by Jock MacGregor

BACK FROM HIS TRIP to America, Jimmy Carreras was bubbling with enthusiasm, but as a producer-distributor, he wishes many independent British exhibitors would get a more realistic appreciation of the industry's problems. He is sick of the constant knocking of the British producers and the suggestion that they are pampered. There are bad ones, some not so competent, and some plain knaves, as Jim would be the first to admit, but overall they do lessen the exhibitors' burden.

It is the everlasting snipping at the Eady Fund and the like that really gets him. "They just don't know how lucky they are having an extra 80 odd pictures a year to augment their programs—and many of them among the biggest money makers," he all but explodes. "In America, the exhibitors would give their eye teeth for that extra product."

Jim is convinced that without these aids to take some of the risk out of production, output would fall drastically. Then the exhibitor would find himself in a sellers' market, and the overall average 35 per cent terms for a double feature program would be a thing of the past. The current ceiling of 50 per cent would be forgotten, and real tough terms would be the order.

THE ENTERTAINING British film is really clicking at the domestic box office. "Carry On, Nurse" established a new record for the ABC Circuit in London recently by taking nearly $280,000, and is being challenged by "Room at the Top." Such figures are vastly in excess of any Hollywood pictures, other than the road show specials like "South Pacific," are doing.

Despite the phenomenal success of "Nurse," however, Nat Cohen tells me he is not cashing in at the expense of the exhibitors. They are paying their usual sliding percentage scales! The top break figures are being reached, but he is happy that they should get a really great week to help them over the many poor ones during the year.

Do not get the impression that all British pictures are boxoffice hits here. A number are far from it, but the overall have more than the edge on the Hollywood equivalents. Indeed, some of the big American pictures have proved really great disappointments. "Auntie Mame" and "The Big Hurrah" are two recent cases in point. British audiences couldn't have cared less about them.

In turn, I often wonder if Hollywood wouldn't be far better off in the long run if it gave a little greater consideration to the foreign market and refrain from exporting its less suitable offerings.

THE VARIETY CLUB has been splashing its funds. In addition to a number of moderate donations, $14,700 has gone towards the cost of a boys' club which is under construction at Kingston to combat local "Teddy Boy" activity, and $8,400 for a swimming pool for spastics in the London area. David Parry, an 18-year-old Londoner whom Variety sent for a year's scholarship at the Phillips Exeter Academy, New Hampshire, is to tour America and Canada. On learning this, Irving Allen, Mike Frankovich, Sam Eckman, and Bill Levy arranged to give him a dollar allowance to cover incidentals and pocket money.

Latin America Market Seen On Increase

RIO DE JANEIRO, BRAZIL — At a press conference attended by representatives of leading Brazilian publications here, Universal Pictures President Milton R. Rackmil voiced his confidence in the continued strengthening of the Brazilian economy, predicting that its tremendous growth and that of other Latin American nations would be reflected in a still greater potential for American business in general, and the motion picture industry in particular.

"There is room for an even greater development of the motion picture business in the expanding economies of Latin America," he told the well-attended gathering. "It is my firm belief that an important segment of our industry's future lies in these countries."

Rackmil, who with vice-president and foreign general manager Americo Aboaf, was in Rio for the company's Brazilian sales conference, reviewed U-I's strong and rapid come-back, outlining future production plans and operating policies.

In discussing the unprecedented American success of "Imitation of Life," which is creating strong advance anticipation here, he noted that it was the forerunner of a line of top boxoffice productions, which would include "This Earth Is Mine," "Operation Petticoat," "Any Way The Wind Blows," "Spartacus," etc.

Rackmil also pointed to the success of other current U-I releases in Latin America, particularly "Horror of Dracula," which had just opened in Sao Paulo, setting a record.

Face Of A Fugitive

WESTERN
81m

Columbia
(Eastman Color)

ESTIMATE: Good western for program.

CAST: Fred MacMurray, Lin McCarthy, Dorothy Green, Alan Baxter, Myrna Fahey, James Coburn, Francis de Sales, Gina Gillespie, Ron Hayes, Paul Burns, Buzz Henry, John Milford, James Gavin, Hal K. Dawson, Stanley Farrar, Rankin Mansfield, Harrison Lewis. A Morningside Production; executive producer, Charles H. Schneer; produced by David Heilweil; directed by Paul Wendkos.

STORY: Gunman Fred MacMurray, arrested for participating in a robbery, escapes from a lawman, who is killed by MacMurray's brother, who also dies. MacMurray enters a frontier town and establishes a new identity. He is attracted to Dorothy Green and also takes a liking to her brother, Lin McCarthy, town sheriff. Rancher Alan Baxter is fencing in public lands and MacMurray aids McCarthy in opposing him. Reward posters bearing MacMurray's picture are on their way to town, and he knows he must escape. MacMurray stays, however to back McCarthy in a showdown battle with Baxter. He is badly wounded, but has recovered his self-respect.

X-RAY: Nothing very new is presented in this story of a bad man's rejuvenation, but good performances, particularly by MacMurray, and plenty of action keeps things at a good clip most of the way. Good color photography is also an asset. This should please on the program where westerns are popular as it has most of the elements. The men in the cast fare much better than the women, who fail to impress, but that's generally the way it is with westerns. The climax is well-directed and interest-holding. Screenplay is by David T. Chantler and Daniel B. Ullman.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Fair program price.

MUSICAL

(VistaVision)

ESTIMATE: Solid Entertainment.

CAST: Danny Kaye, Barbara Bel Geddes, Louis Armstrong, Bob Crosby, Harry Guardino, Susan Gordon, Tuesday Weld, Valerie Allen, Ray Anthony, Bobby Troup, Shelley Manne, Ray Daley. Produced by Jack Rose; directed by Melville Shavelson; a Dena Production.

STORY: Danny Kaye ("Red" Nichols) is a cornet playing country boy, who goes to the big city in the 1920's and gets a job with Bob Crosby's band. He meets singer Barbara Bel Geddes, and wins praise from Louis Armstrong. After he marries Bel Geddes, he has a tough time because of his insistence on playing "Dixieland" and being a nonconformist in musical arrangements. Despite being pregnant, Bel Geddes struggles right along with Kaye on one-night stands. When the baby is born, he wants her to quit singing, but she keeps on to help out financially. The baby grows up with the band, and when Kaye finds popularity, Bel Geddes insists it is no life for the child. She places her in an institution. The child is stricken with polio, and Kaye, blaming himself for neglect, throws his cornet away and gives up his band. He drops out of sight and spends all his time with Bel Geddes in trying to treat the child, Susan Gordon. Comes the war and Kaye works in a shipyard. The daughter, now 13 (Tuesday Weld), finds some of Kaye's old recordings, likes them, and encourages him to return to music. He opens at a small place, and the band is a flop until Armstrong shows up to help in a jam session. As the band swings out, Weld gets to her feet without aid of crutches and walks up to the bandstand and asks Kaye if she can have this dance.

X-RAY: There's a beat that can be appreciated by old and young alike; there's fun and tugs at the heart strings; there's Danny Kaye and the cornet of Red Nichols; and Louis Armstrong and his real gone trumpet; there's a story that holds interest; there are good performances, and smart and efficient production and direction. All in all, it's an entertaining package that should be a crowd pleaser. The story conforms to the usual pattern, but is bettered by a few good twists.

The tunes are old-time favorites. The screenplay is by the producer and director from a story by Robert Smith. The trumpet solos for Kaye are by Red Nichols, himself.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Better rates.

Pork Chop Hill

UA
(Melville)

ESTIMATE: Hard-hitting war film.

CAST: Gregory Peck, Harry Guardino, Rip Torn, George Peppard, James Edwards, Bob Steele, Woody Strode, George Shibats, Norman Fell, Robert Blake, Biff Elliot, Barry Atwater, Michael Garth. Produced by Sy Bartlett; directed by Louis Milestone.

STORY: While a peace treaty conference is going on at Panmunjom over the Korean conflict, 70 miles away, Pork Chop Hill is in the hands of the Chinese. Lieutenant Gregory Peck is ordered to lead an all-out assault on the embattled hill. Not only does it have strategic value, but it is also important from a psychological standpoint with regard to the negotiations. The brass fears a natural reluctance on the part of the soldiers to extend themselves with the possibility of peace so close. The advance takes place with Peck losing many men, but they do eventually reach the top and take over. Whether or not they can hold is another thing, being short of men, ammo, and supplies, and with radio contact limited. The decision to reinforce must come from high up the military ladder. As thousands of Chinese move in to throw the handful of Americans off the hill, American reinforcements do arrive. Pork Chop Hill is held.

X-RAY: A famous General is credited with the statement, "War is hell." Well, it sure is as exhibited here. For practically the full running time, nothing but combat is seen, tied in with emotional stress and strain of the men behind and in front of the guns. The technical advisor on the film is Captain Joseph G. Clemons, Jr., whom Gregory Peck represents on the screen, and it must therefore be assumed that all that is seen is authentic and real. Military and other government officials are so impressed with the entry that the utmost in praise and cooperation has been offered. The cast of relative unknowns headed by Peck does well, with many playing true-to-life roles. The direction and production are also good and bear a stamp of authority. If theatregoers are of a mood for strong war film, then all is fine. Extensive promotion plans are in the offing to aid in the selling. The screenplay is by James R. Webb, based on a work by S. L. A. Marshall.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Higher program or better if individual situation warrants.

WARNERS

The Nun's Story (821) DRAMA 149M.

Warners
(Technicolor)
(Filmed abroad)

ESTIMATE: Unusual entry.

CAST: Audrey Hepburn, Peter Finch, Dame Edith Evans, Dame Peggy Ashcroft, Dean Jagger, Mildred Dunnock, Beatrice Straight, Patricia Collinge, Rosalie Critchley, Ruth White, Barbara O'Neil, Margaret Phillips, Patricia Bosworth, Colleen Dewhurst, Stephen Murray, Lionel Jeffries, Niall MacGinnis. Produced by Henry Blanke; directed by Fred Zinnemann.

STORY: Audrey Hepburn bids her father, Dr. Dean Jagger, as well as her brothers and sisters farewell as she enters a convent to become a nun. There, under the guidance of Sister Mildred Dunnock, she and the other postulants begin their dedication to the church, with all ruled by Mother Dame Edith Evans. She attempts to conform to her new life, but there are times when it is difficult. She confesses a desire to become a nursing nun in the Belgian Congo, and eventually is sent to a school for tropical medicine, from where she is graduated high in her class despite a suggestion to fail her examinations to show her humility, made by one of the presiding nuns. She gets further training in a mental institution and eventually does go to the Congo. She is assigned to work with Dr. Peter Finch, a genius, bachelor, and unbeliever. She is a most competent assistant and tries to ignore his taunts as well as his magnetism. She works very hard and finds that she has contracted tuberculosis, which means a return home. Finch undertakes to cure her there, and she recovers amidst fine care and affection. She is sent back to Belgium accompanying an important patient, and Evans refuses to send her back. Instead, she is assigned to a hospital near the border of Holland where World War II catches her. She and the other nuns are told they must carry on as if nothing has happened, but she is drawn into underground activities, knowing she must help her people. When her father is killed by the Germans, she confesses that she can no longer remain a nun since she bears hate for the enemy. She signs the necessary papers and removes her habit, walking out of the convent and into a new life.

X-RAY: The first half of this film shows for the first time to lay audiences the mysteries and ordeals of the vow-taking ceremonies for nuns within the Roman Catholic Church, and evidently considerable research has gone into this phase of the film. The young girl who would become a servant of God is wonderfully portrayed by Audrey Hepburn under the fine direction of Fred Zinnemann, who has turned out an unusual and thoroughly different film. How some audiences will take to this minute breakdown of church procedure is something that will be interesting to observe, for it is difficult to classify this portion of the entry as entertainment in the accepted sense of the word. The experience of becoming a nun and the detail that has gone into the filmed presentation seems to make the picture much too long. The second half of the story dealing with her adventures outside the convent moves at a considerably faster pace and at a more interesting one. There is no question but that the film will need special attention. As such, exhibitors would do well to evaluate the entry in keeping with their situation, operation, and population. The balance of the cast is capable, while the settings and production values are also in the better category. Quite an assist comes from the use of color and the various backgrounds of different countries. The screenplay is by Robert Anderson, based on the best-seller by Kathryn C. Hulme. Incidentally, this reviewer must note that at the theatre screening where this was seen, bits of the dialogue seemed to be unintelligible. This may have been strictly a local print problem.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Up to the individual theatre.

AD LINES: "A Masterpiece In Movie-Making"; "An Unusual Film That Will Be The Subject Of Wide-Spread Discussion."

The Young Philadelphians (818) DRAMA 136M.

Warners

ESTIMATE: Highly interesting, absorbing drama.

STORY: Back in 1924, Diane Brewster weds wealthy socialite Adam West. Outside the church, Brian Keith watches, in love with Brewster, but unable to overcome her desire to climb into the upper strata of the Philadelphia society whirl. She finds that West cannot consummate the marriage. After he storms out, she turns to Keith for love and reassurance. The next morning, she learns West has been killed in an auto accident. A son is born, and though she is cut off from the family millions when she refuses to turn him over to her in-laws, she insists on naming him after West. She also refuses to marry Keith so that her son can have the advantages of the family name. At 22, Paul Newman, the son, has done well at school, working his way, and has become a close friend to wealthy Robert Vaughan, who is unable to get his money from guardian uncle Robert Douglas. Newman meets Barbara Rush, a daughter of one of the best families, and a romance develops. When they decide to get married, her father, prominent lawyer John Williams, persuades him to wait, promising to sponsor him at law school and give him a job with the firm. Rush, bitter with Newman, goes to Europe and marries Fred Eisley. Newman uses his charm on Alexis Smith, wife of prominent lawyer Otto Kruger, to get a job helping him with a book. This also earns him a job with Kruger's law firm. A hitch in the army interrupts his career. Vaughan loses his arm, while Eisley is killed. Newman resumes his law practice, and he and Rush see each other occasionally. An accident brings Billie Burke to him seeking legal advice. So impressed is she that she switches her multi-million dollar account from Williams to Newman. This throws Rush, her niece, in closer contact with Newman, and they resume their romance. Keith asks Newman to run for the City Council, but he is reluctant. Meanwhile, Vaughan is arrested for the apparent murder of Douglas and only wants Newman to defend him. He agrees despite pressures from socialites who fear all kinds of exposures of family skeletons during the trial. Newman proves that Douglas killed himself, winning an acquittal. Rush is in love with him more than ever now that he has demonstrated he has the courage of his convictions, and it's assumed it won't be too long before they'll wed. He has also learned his true parentage, and it looks as though there will be some happiness for Keith and Brewster.

X-RAY: Featuring a well-organized, highly interesting, absorbing, and entertaining plot, this entry could do well by itself at the box-office. Once viewers become interested in the yarn, they are held throughout as the characters reveal themselves, their faults, and their intrigues. The cast does fine by its assignments, with Paul Newman and Barbara Rush particularly effective, and superior direction and production boost this into the quality category. In addition, another asset is an extensive exploitation and promotion campaign that is being slanted toward the majority of motion picture audiences, the younger part of the population. The screenplay is by James Gunn based on the novel, "The Philadelphian," by Richard Powell, which was a best-seller among book purchasers.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Higher bracket.

AD LINES: "They Lived In A World Of Their Own Until A Stranger Burst Through Their Wall Of Protection"; "He Was Determined To Let No One Stand In His Way."

Police Cooperation May Come in Handy

THEATRE: Savoy,
ADDRESS: Luton, England
MANAGER: John E. Lake

Not all police visits are welcome; but I recently cooperated with the police in getting out a small leaflet and getting it to the public, including our patrons.

Headed: "Crime Prevention. Bedfordshire Constabulary" my copy read: "The Bedfordshire Police join the management of the Savoy Theatre in wishing its patrons a most enjoyable performance. To get the utmost pleasure from such occasions, patrons are reminded that—before the show they should have locked all windows and doors of their home and car and secured their cycles . . . and after the show proceed home carefully. Thieves steal your pleasure as well as your property. Thank you."

This cost nothing to the theatre other than the small cost of paper and printing; but it is a valuable piece of public relations and theatre publicity since it reflects the esteem in which 'The Law' holds this ABC theatre.

A Dog Show for A Dog Film

THEATRE: Schine's Rialto,
ADDRESS: Little Falls, N. Y.
MANAGER: Nick Kauffman

This is what might well be called doing what comes naturally. And what is more natural that holding a dog show for a dog film?

For Buena Vista's "The Shaggy Dog" we aimed our campaign right at the youngsters.

First, we had an essay contest going in the local schools among the upper grades. The winner in each grade was allowed to bring a friend of their own choosing as guests at the opening matinee. We also saw to it that the sisters of various parochial schools were invited to attend this show, thus assuring ourselves of announcements in the schools.

Our "Shaggy" dog show was worked up for opening day matinee, whereby the youngster bringing in the dog most like the one in the picture got a first prize of dog food and dog accessories, and the next two runners-up were given consolation prizes of a similar nature.

We laid the groundwork with our local news dealer for the Dell Comic Book tie-up; and the local deejays went for plugs of the song hit records along with picture, playdates, etc.

Parent-Teachers Associations and children's organizations were alerted.

To promote the Pittsburgh opening of Columbia's "The Bandit Of Zhobe" in 23 neighborhood and drive-in theatres, a contest was recently arranged with the cooperation of radio station KQV and Murphy's Department Store where a bamboo prison was erected. Patrons tried to free the imprisoned "Bandit." First prize was a $100 U.S. Savings Bond.

Street bally consisted of a tiny burro (we were unable to get a shaggy dog). However, this got plenty of attention, appropriately bannered.

On top of all this, we 'saturated' the air with Shaggy Dog advertising; and this, along with our other stunts resulted in the film doing very well for us.

The House Is Really Haunted

THEATRE: State,
ADDRESS: Sioux Falls, S. D.,
MANAGER: Cliff Knoll

Continuing our battle against empty seats, we really went to work on Allied Artists' "House On Haunted Hill."

One of the best selling mediums for this particular picture was our Haunted Hill contest with radio station KIHQ. I recommend this kind of contest for use in any location if the radio station will go along with the theatre. It did a great deal of selling tickets for us.

We bought absolutely no radio time, but arranged the contest with them which really "hit the bell." Through their cooperation we ran a search for Sioux Falls, Haunted House Contest starting 10 days before the picture opened. This station is on an 18 hour operating policy per day and during these 18 hours they agreed to give us and our contest two spots an hour. This netted us 360 spots at no cost to the theatre. Each day their listeners were given a new clue of a pre-selected "haunted house." The winner was determined by the first postmarked card with the correct answer. We promoted over $100 in prizes and all were given to the winner. These prizes included a $25 Savings Bond, a wrist watch, a flash camera kit, and a table model radio. The contest was truly a success with the station and theatre, getting a tremendous amount of telephone inquiries which, of course, we could not answer due to the type of contest. We are positive that this had a great deal to do with selling tick-

Three of the Fifth Avenue, New York City, windows of Best and Company were recently given over to a promotion of MGM's "Green Mansions," Radio City Music Hall. The tie-up display was an outgrowth of the film's promotion in Seventeen Magazine, which devoted 30 pages to "Green Mansions" and the fashions and products that it inspired. The windows have been seen by millions. Similar store windows crediting the picture are set in 25 other department stores throughout the country.

Large-Scale Ballyhoo Boosts "Mating Game"

NEW YORK—MGM's "The Mating Game" opened last fortnight at the Capitol, Broadway, with full scale hoopla, showmanship, and exploitation to start it on its way to box office results. The campaign proves that exploitation is pretty much the same the world over, with many of the big town stunts certainly applicable for all situations to follow.

Tony Randall, co-star in the film, made personal appearances in the lobby and signed autographs both matinee and evening on opening day.

Priscilla Alden Beach, the "mateologist," gave advice on "how to play the mating game" in the mezzanine of the big theatre and was on hand each day to give her character analysis.

WINS started a station-wide promotion based on the "trading" done in the film. Randall was on the air to start it by donating the "shirt off his back." Listeners were invited to submit items to trade for it. A qualified trader was on duty at all times to evaluate the items and make the deals with the object to "uptrade" each time. At the end of this week-long promotion, the final item was sold for charity. All WINS disc jokeys participated in the promotion.

Meanwhile, eight girls, dressed like Debbie Reynolds in the film, were doing street ballyhoo in New York's most crowded areas as a tie-in for the picture and radio station WABC. They carried portable radios tuned to the station, and anyone going up to them and giving them the call letters got a pass to the theatre and a copy of Debbie's record. The station promoted this on the air for 24 hours. Each hour, listeners were given tips as to the whereabouts of the girls. They were, of course, appropriately bannered with "The Mating Game."

All radio stations played the Debbie Reynolds record heavily as part of the New York campaign, backing up the heavy radio advertising.

Randall remained in town for several weeks and continued to do newspaper, radio and television interviews for the film as well as making personal appearances and taking part in special events. He was interviewed by 250 high school editors at a sneak preview.

Mel Ferrer, director of MGM's "Green Mansions" and one of the stars of MGM's "The World, The Flesh and The Devil," recently answered questions of 125 high school editors at a press conference in the MGM New York City projection room.

At a recent ceremony at ABC headquarters in Golden Square, London, general manager W. Cartlidge presented Douglas G. Adams, Regal, Kirkcaldy, Scotland, with the check for $200 he won in the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITOR "Showmen-Of-The-Year" contest. Also seen are, left, R. Crabb, Lyric, Wellingborough, and Nat Matthews, Ritz, Leyton, London, with their Silver Citations in the same contest, and the publication's London representative, Jock MacGregor. On the right, Len Leech, head, Pepsi-Cola in Great Britain, presents the Pepsi-Cooler which Norman Wasser had specially flown to London to Adams as a bonus prize. Looking on are ABC's exploitation manager Clifford Elson; publicity manager Douglas Ewin; and MPE's MacGregor.

with an arrow pointing to another sign placed in the outer lobby reading "40 Million etc." with arrow, to yet another sign in the inner lobby reading "30 Million etc." with arrow pointing finally to our monster with sign which read "See 20 Million etc." I don't think a single person missed seeing it and when the film finally played we did exceptionally good, considering it was midweek.

I believe this setup could be used for almost any situation.

On opening night we placed the "monster" outside where it was seen by all passersby.

Amateur Revue Always Good

THEATRE: Regal

ADDRESS: Wakefield, England

MANAGER: Reg Helley

One thing led to another and my campaign for Warner-Hammer's British comedy "Up The Creek" became one of my biggest ever.

Five weeks prior to playdate I started rehearsals for a 45-minute revue with a nautical flavor to be staged two weeks before the showing of the picture. I looked around for suitable local acts and wrote a script to exploit them. I persuaded one of my usherettes to appear; and played Captain Colonna myself. The whole staff got behind me and together we overcame many shortages and difficulties.

The buzz got around about the show and I bolstered the word of mouth publicly with throwaways and gimmick handouts. Local personalities offered help in various ways. The Town Clerk heard about it and crowned my endeavors. He asked if I would compete in the Holidays at Home talent contest in the Park on the public holiday and could arrange for ABC-TV to audition the winners. This was an opportunity too good to miss for publicity and public relations and it was fixed for ABC-TV and the committee consented to a tie-up with the film in the form of displays and guest tickets.

The corporation gave generous plugs in their advertising and no less than 8,000 brochures were sold at the park.

My ABC Minors—patrons of our Saturday kids' shows took part in the show and to my query "Where have you been?" chorused "Up The Creek." The catch phrase greeted me everytime I walked on stage during the four hour performance which was attended by thousands including the deputy mayor. The press was uniformly enthusiastic about the show and first class relations with the City Corporation have been cemented.

Prior to playdate several of the acts appeared in the music rooms of large public houses in the district and worked in plugs for their stage show and the picture. During the actual stage show at the theatre, a photographer took photos of the audience. Each day these were displayed outside the theatre under the heading "Happy Faces" and the most natural happy faces were ringed. The lucky people ringed were given guest tickets to see the feature if claimed promptly.

At the Saturday ABC Minor matinees I

COMPANY ASSISTS

COLUMBIA has arranged a national tie-in with the Consolidated Lobster Company to promote "It Happened To Jane". Consolidated, distributor of Ocean Clear Lobsters, will supply lobsters for promotions in major cities across the country. Working in conjunction with Columbia field men, Consolidated will make lobsters available as prizes in newspaper, radio and TV contests, for street ballyhoo and merchandising displays. In addition, there will be tie-ins with leading hotels and seafood restaurants, with Consolidated supplying lobster dinners. The company has jobbers in 20 major cities and direct accounts all over the country.

PARAMOUNT, Dot Records and Danny Kaye have united in a vast campaign on "The Five Pennies". Kaye, star of the picture and the soundtrack album, has volunteered to kick off the vast national and local-level campaign with a tour of 15 major cities. In every city, he will be host to exhibitors, the press, disc jockeys, radio and television station officials, record dealers and important opinion-makers at an evening screening of the film, immediately followed by Dot Records at a reception for local music industry representatives. He will meet with newsmen at luncheon the next day to discuss the picture and the album. Dot will soon release the "Five Pennies" album of soundtrack jazz from the picture.

WARNERS announces that the Color Association of the United States will introduce "John Paul Jones Blue" as the nation's new navy-toned blue for use in all fashion and other materials coincidental with the release of the Technirama-Technicolor film spectacle of the founding of the American Navy. In announcing the introduction of the new color, the Association declared, "We know of no more fitting name for our Spring, 1960, navy, than 'John Paul Jones Blue.'" The Color Association serves as a clearing-house and information center on fashions for manufacturers in all industries. Incidentally, the May issue of Argosy Magazine will devote its cover, six pages of color photographs and an article to the film.

20TH CENTURY-FOX will have a blockbuster campaign on "Say One For Me". Plans call for a national magazine campaign; the most extensive music promotion in 20th-Fox history with Bing Crosby, Debbie Reynolds and Robert Wagner starring in a soundtrack album via Columbia Records; a TV trailer featuring Crosby delivering a "see-the-picture" pitch; special soundtrack spots featuring the company's new style 60, 20 and 30-second spots featuring the voices of the three stars in actual scenes from the picture; and a series of guest appearances by the stars on national TV variety shows. Another facet of the campaign will be an extensive investment in local TV time, featuring television spots geared to the specific area used.

UNITED ARTISTS has set five merchandising tieups for "Man In The Net" with cross-promotions arranged with Smith Corona Typewriters, Webcor Tape Recorder, Eumig Camera, Latex Bathing Caps and Buff-ette Machines. The Smith Corona Company is servicing its 18,000 outlets with display counter cards showing Alan Ladd using the typewriter and giving full credits for the UA release. Webcor dealers will feature window displays, posters and streamers promoting the film. The Latex Company is distributing over 250,000 of its bathing caps with a special photo of Carolyn Jones and full credits for counter displays. Miss Jones is also featured in trade ads and displays of the merchandising items of Buff-ette Machine Company.

played a streamer and cards with lifebelts reading "British Waterways will take you up the Caloer but you must see "Up The Creek at the Regal, Wakefield."

EXPLOITATION—an encyclopedia of useable exploitation stunts—is published every other week as a section of Motion Picture Exhibitor.

United Artists' "The Big Country" was most attractively sold in France by this theatre in Paris which erected the above eye-catching front and wall panel.

Fernandel is therefore Italian since the kitchen is on the Italian side and that he should not be in the French Customs. Fernandel leaves the service to establish residence on the Italian side and get proper papers to apply for re-entry into France. Toto, conscience-stricken, helps out, for a price, of course. There are also marriage complications since Italy doesn't recognize divorce, and he is escorted from Italy as a non-desirable. He is told he must live between the two countries since he belongs to neither. Fernandel decides to bring public attention to his predicament via some fancy rifle shooting. Meanwhile, Toto discovers that the border was different in 1919 when Fernandel was born and that the kitchen birthplace of Fernandel was in France at the time. His troubles over, Fernandel is restored to his position with full rights, and once again he give chase to Toto when he sees him smuggling.

X-RAY: This import should be well received by audiences in the art and specialty spots, offering the lure of both Fernandel and Toto as well as an amusing story that holds interest fairly well throughout. The acting, direction, and production are good, and the countryside and populace offer additional attractions. The screenplay is by Jacques Emmanuel and Jean-Charles Tacchella.

AD LINES: "Fun At The Border Of Italy And France As The Top Comedians From Both Countries Offer Their Best"; "His Word Was Law . . . Most of the Time."

Too Many Crooks

COMEDY
87M.

Lopert
(English-made)

ESTIMATE: Amusing comedy.

CAST: Terry-Thomas, George Cole, Brenda De Banzie, Bernard Bresslaw, Sidney James, Joe Melia, Vera Day, Delphi Lawrence. Produced and directed by Mario Zampi; associate producer, Giulio Zampi.

STORY: George Cole is a bungling boss of a group of inept gangsters in London, who faces a revolt from the others in the gang until he decides to rob crooked tycoon, Terry-Thomas, who keeps his cash in his office, not wanting to pay taxes. When this fails, Cole decides that they should kidnap Thomas' daughter for ransom. Instead, they kidnap his wife, Brenda De Banzie. When they ask for ransom on pain of death, Thomas refuses, stating he's been trying to get rid of her for years. When the discovery of a mutilated woman's body is printed in the papers, Thomas fears they've carried out their threat. Actually, De Banzie is alive and incensed over Thomas' attitude. She decides to join the gang in getting money from Thomas. They acquire a hoard he has hidden at home and then blackmail him for more. Also Cole's girl friend, Vera Day, gets money from him for false passports with which they are to flee the country. They track him to his mother's home where he has another emergency hoard, and they get that, too. They all take off in the getaway car and roar off, unaware that the suitcase full of money has opened, spilling the banknotes all over the road to be blown away by the wind.

X-RAY: This comedy import has a number of amusing sequences, but everyone seems to try too hard to be funny. In doing so, a number of low spots result. The cast is competent, and the direction and production are okay. It can either serve in the art and specialty spots or as lower half filler on regulation programs. The screenplay is by Michael Pertwee.

AD LINES: "You Have To See This To Believe It"; "Crooks, Crooks Everywhere And Lots Of Fun For All."

MISCELLANEOUS

Darby O'Gill And The Little People

DRAMA
93M.

Buena Vista
(Technicolor)

ESTIMATE: The Disney name and the luck of the Irish should prove of assistance.

CAST: Albert Sharpe, Janet Munro, Sean Connery, Jimmy O'Dea, Kieron Moore, Estelle Winwood, Walter Fitzgerald, Dennis O'Dea, J. G. Devlin. Produced by Walt Disney; directed by Robert Stevenson.

STORY: Darby O'Gill, known in other circles as Albert Sharpe, is a caretaker on the estate of Lord Walter Fitzgerald. The latter thinks it's about time that Sharpe was retired and offers him a cottage and a pension while replacing him with young and handsome Sean Connery. Sharpe bids Connery keep the news from his attractive daughter, Janet Munro, until he finds a propitious moment to tell her. Sharpe is also famous as a story teller, specializing in tales of the leprechauns. One night, he stumbles down a hole and lands in the kingdom of the little people, the monarch of which is Jimmy O'Dea. The latter tries to keep Sharpe captive but he escapes. O'Dea goes to even the score for being ridiculed before his subjects but winds up a captive of Sharpe, who is determined to get three wishes. The two are all for making a love match between Munro and Connery, and it almost happens until she finds out Connery is replacing Sharpe. She is taken seriously ill, and when Sharpe sees the death coach coming, he asks O'Dea to arrange for him to be taken instead. O'Dea arranges it so that both are spared, and there is a reconciliation after Connery has it out with the local bully, who has his own eye on Munro. Sharpe is perfectly willing to retire and tell his stories.

X-RAY: Dripping with Irish brogue at times thick enough to bewilder the ears of ordinary mortals, this latest in creations by Walt Disney has charm, humor, a heavy dose of leprechaun fantasy, and romance, to say nothing of fine scenery made all the more presentable by the use of color. It's a different type of presentation from what the younger set and other Disney fans are accustomed to, but one can never tell about a product with the Disney label. Some super-selling could make this attractive to the public with resulting better grosses if it takes. The screenplay is by Lawrence Edward Watkin suggested by H. T. Kavanagh's "Darby O'Gill" stories. The cast, special effects, direction, and production are good.

TIPS ON BIDDING: Use individual judgment, taking subject matter into consideration.

AD LINES: "The Latest And Greatest Of Walt Disney's Creations"; "Have Yourself Some Fun With The Little People."

Go, Johnny, Go

75M

Hal Roach

ESTIMATE: Rock-n-roller for lower half. . .

CAST: Alan Freed, Jimmy Clanton, Sandy Stewart, Chuck Berry, Herb Vigran, Frank Wilcox, Barbara Woodell, Milton Frome, Joe Cranston, Executive producer, Hal Roach, Jr.; produced by Alan Freed; directed by Paul Landres.

STORY: Youthful singer Jimmy Clanton is entertaining teeners in a theatre on one of Alan Freed's in-person shows which prompts Freed to relate the youth's story. Clanton runs away from an orphanage when he is dismissed from the choir for jiving with the organ. In New York, he gets a job as an usher, but his enthusiasm for the Alan Freed show gets him fired. He hears that Freed is searching for a promising youngster to be called Johnny Melody. At the stage door, he meets Sandy Stewart, a girl he knew at the orphanage, who was adopted and who also has a yen to be a singer. Freed brushes them off. They next meet at a recording studio where they make a demonstration record to be sent to Freed. The latter is impressed with the record and plays it on his radio show, which brings on an avalanche of calls. Since the record bore no name or address, Freed keeps playing the record in hopes that Clanton will call him. Stewart does hear the record and tries to get in touch with Clanton, but the latter has gone out to see about buying her a jeweled pin for Christmas. The price proves prohibitive, and he breaks the window, planning to steal the pin. Stewart guesses what he is up to and phones Freed. They both arrive before the police do and Freed takes the blame for the broken window. Clanton goes to the top guided by Freed, and he and Stewart get married.

X-RAY: There is a story to be found here, but it doesn't interfere with the music too much. For the teeners and rock-n-rollers there are such artists as Ritchie Valens, the Cadillacs, Chuck Berry, Jackie Wilson, Eddie Cochran, Jo Ann Campbell, the Flamingos, etc., in addition to stars Clanton and Stewart. The proceedings are fairly pleasant; interest is maintained, and direction and production are adequate. It can make up as part of the program or even better if a special show is to be presented for teeners. The screenplay is by Gary Alexander.

AD LINES: "Spring Is A Time For Youth To Swing Into Action"; "Fun For All"; "Man, This Is The Most . . . Grab Your Chick And Swing On Down For A Look And Listen."

Don't miss the bus!!

Warner's throws it into high gear on May 6th to kick off the hottest showmanship campaign in years! A busload of Hollywood's brightest young stars, junketing 3475 glamorous miles to Philadelphia, for the spectacular May 20th world premiere of "The Young Philadelphians"!

They'll hit 34 major cities, more than 200 towns, with overnight stops at 12 big key points. They'll be all over radio and TV, the papers and magazines, public squares and theatre stages, building up a beautiful storm of hoopla and ballyhoo to pound home the red-hot "young moderns" theme of the picture.

And this is only the beginning! Check the pressbook for all the fabulous details about the bus and its itinerary – for the personalized and gimmick-loaded ad campaign, the special teaser and theatre trailers, the terrific sound track radio spots, the stories and the stunts galore!

Man, don't you miss the bus! It's a bandwagon!
